have a new set of standards

To be chic they must be short, almost to the waist; sleeves are either long or short or absent; weaves are lacey; stripes are irregular and run around or up and down. In other words, fashion concentrates on the sweater and Bonwit Teller in concentrating on fashion presents the smartest selection in town.

Hats of Quality since 1823
392 FIFTH AVENUE ~ NEW YORK

The nation's smartest shops are now showing southern resort
wear in Melo Polo.

Never has a sports fabric had such a welcome. All the leading dress houses are using it and boasting of the fact in their labels. Not surprising, when you consider its beguiling suede-like texture, at once soft and crisp. Made of pure spun silk, it emerges from the tub as fresh as leaves after a shower. The inimitable silk for outdoor wear . . . And so we call it MELO-POLO, THE FABRIC FOR ALL OUTDOORS.

From top to toe in peasant scarfs—her hat, her shoes, her bag, her two-piece tuck-in frock, made from the scarf of an unsuspecting peasant! It's a costume sure to be famous. SAKS—FIFTH AVE.

For the blithe, light-hearted youngster who sails a boat, turns a handspring or captures a heart with equal nonchalance—gob "trou" of gabardine and a gaily striped Antibes shirt of lisle. BEST & COMPANY.

Proving that to the side-lines belong some of the glory—at least the fashion glory—a spectator costume of that intriguing new woven cotton that looks for all the world as if it were knitted. Natural with contrasting strips and a tuck-in blouse of the natural shade. LORD & TAYLOR.

The success of the party is yours, if you wear this adorable dance frock of cotton net printed in moonlit pastels.—BEST & COMPANY.

More and more, the peasant to the foreground—or rather peasant scarfs—here you see them as the delightfully chic coat to a bathing costume. The trunks of the suit—and this is important—are of pique! SAKS—FIFTH AVENUE.

Shoes of peasant scarfs—imagine it, shoes—designed by La Valle; and bags and parasols and hats and even beach mattresses, all in the same charming patterns. SAKS—FIFTH AVENUE.

Enter—the overall skirt—quite the most delightfully inconsistent and utterly smart beach outfit we've seen in many a fashion-right day. Of peasant squares, of course—by BEST & COMPANY.

"RAYON INSPIRES GREAT FABRIC ARTISTS," SAYS DE MEYER

WORLD FAMOUS FASHION AUTHORITY

"Rayon's gift to fashions is beauty and distinction. It has placed in the hands of the great European designers utterly new, exquisite fabrics—lustrous satins and incredibly delicate panne and transparent velvets. These lovely materials would not exist at all without rayon.

"Their polished sheen is very flattering—they are soft and pliable, and drape gracefully to the figure. To fancy weaves of faille, taffeta and moiré, rayon also adds fresh beauty; and it gives new delight to women who adore gorgeous materials. Great fabric designers and dressmakers do not employ rayon because of its economy but for its beauty; nevertheless, the economy of rayon is a valuable point worth bearing in mind."

BARON DEMEYER, famous Parisian arbiter of fashions, facile writer, true artist, praises the many new rayon fabrics

1. BOTANY WORSTED MILLS

2. J. C. MILNE & COMPANY, INC.

3. GREENSTONE SILK CORPORATION

4. HAAS BROTHERS FABRICS CORP.

1. "LORELEI". A light, pliable rayon and wool material which adapts itself perfectly to every type of daytime dress or wrap. The slight open-work mesh accented by a rayon thread gives the lacy appearance so important this season

2. A striking hand-woven rayon and wool material with that really knitted look so much in vogue for country and sports this year. The pebble weave of yellow and white is accented by a black thread and casual flecks of gold

3. This all rayon flat crêpe with its firm, fine texture and exquisite sheen is especially suited to this season's softly clinging frocks. It adapts itself to all the whimsies of "dressmaker" styles. White and tan with a touch of capucine on a red brown

4. "SIREN CHIFFON". An alluring material in exquisite pale shades for evening, with a scattering façonné pattern of rayon on a background of silk chiffon. An almost imperceptible design in the weave gives additional interest

"GAYETY AND CHIC COMBINE IN EXQUISITE RAYON"

SAYS MADAME SCHIAPARELLI, ONE OF THE MOST NOTABLE OF PARIS COUTURIERS

"Rayon is like the times we live in—gay, colorful, luminous. Our famous fabric designers use it for this reason. So many materials derive their interest from it—weaves of wool and rayon, silk and rayon, cotton and rayon, as well as those of shimmering rayon itself. The couturier employs it because it is so pliable to work with and so luxurious in appearance.

"Whether a gown or suit is to be worn at St. Moritz, Palm Beach or in New York, always it has gayety and chic if the material itself is wholly or in part rayon, skillfully woven in a contemporary manner."

MADAME SCHIAPARELLI is one of the younger Parisian designers whose brilliant inspirations have made her most significant not only in Paris, but in America as well

For the Riviera or Palm Beach, Madame Schiaparelli designed this clever active-sports frock. The classically simple bodice and the skirt divided in trouser effect allow utter freedom of movement. A wide yellow woven belt marks the normal waistline. Softly shimmering white rayon, which launders to perfection and falls so easily into pleats and folds, is the ideal material for this unusual modern costume

Schiaparelli with unerring instinct for the significant features of the mode designed this daytime town ensemble in black. The "dressmaker" style, seven-eighths length coat has a flattering collar of white galyak and is smartly belted at the natural waistline. Of great chic and interest is the diagonal-weave silk and wool rayon material employed

To wear beneath it Schiaparelli suggests her famous "pinafore" dress in black rayon crêpe. A soft, black wool turban and simple one-strap walking shoes complete this delightful costume

SUNSHINE FASHIONS

AMERICA'S SMARTEST BEACHWEAR

SUNSHINE FASHIONS are those smart, original resort creations that are found only at Burdine's, Miami, Miami Beach and Palm Beach, Florida. . . . Nowhere else are there such distinctively different, appropriate fashions for Florida's internationally famous watering places. For 1930, Sunshine Fashions bathing suits, beach pajamas, shirts and shorts and accessories establish new fashion heights . . . even for Burdine's. . . . So definitely different is this season's conception of smart things for the beach that one must be quite wary to avoid being totally incorrect. # In England, and now in America, it is "Pass the Crispbread"

Throughout England, wherever a bread is served, the preference is for those delicately-baked wafers of all-wheat, English crispbread.

Visitors to England, their tastes captivated by this delicious biscuit, return triumphantly home with packets of Peek Frean's All Wheat Crispbread in their trunks.

To be sure one fancies Peek Frean's Crispbread (known in England and Canada as "Vita-Weat") for its brisk, good, outdoor taste. And epicures are further delighted with the dainty form of these wafer-thin squares.

But of quite the most importance is its healthful, 100 per cent wheat content. All the bran and mineral salts are fully preserved, while the starch is completely modified. For this reason, Peek Frean's Crispbread has become a daily measure of healthfulness, and a delightful means of maintaining a slender figure.

For over seventy years Peek Frean have commanded the loyalty of English appetites. Their consummate skill as makers of delicious biscuits has been recognized by twenty-two royal appointments.

Now Peek Frean's All Wheat Crispbread is available throughout America. Already it is tempting palates and promoting good health in thousands of homes.

Simply ask any purveyor of fine groceries for Peek Frean's All Wheat Crispbread. Peek Frean & Co., Ltd., London, England.

... Plenty of Sunshine, Little Rain—Neither Too Hot Nor Too Cool—That's the GULF COAST

one of America's most beautiful vacation lands, where every outdoor sport is at its finest; golf on perfect courses; motoring beneath age-old oaks; sailing; motor boating; swimming in outdoor pools (or in the surf on warmer days)—all to be enjoyed every day of the winter. Within close proximity to the three Old-World Cities of New Orleans, Mobile, and Pensacola.

There is no more healthful section than the Gulf Coast—for the perfect combination of salt sea breezes, the ozone from the pines, and the sunshine, has made this section, which lies between the Apalachicola River in Northwestern Florida and the City of New Orleans, a Mecca for pleasure-lovers and health-seekers for a couple of centuries.

Modern hotels, clubs, apartments, lodges, and camps afford ample accommodations, at moderate rates. Write to R. D. Pusey, General Passenger Agent, Louisville & Nashville Railroad, Room 424-C, Ninth & Broadway, Louisville, Kentucky, for descriptive literature.

The Gulf Coast is quickly and comfortably reached by fine L. & N. trains from the North, East, and Central West, direct to all points on the Gulf Coast.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE R. R.

The Modern Vacationist Knows His Below Par Season... Therefore Cunard-AnchorWest Indies Cruises are appropriately scheduled...

Cunard meets the rising intelligent demand for short winter vacations... For wise life-loving people who know that 12, 18 or 26 days of tropical sun adds more years to their lives and more lilt to their minds than a year's expensive medical treatment... They realize that basking in a sea-washed port is the perfect winter solution for 'wet-feet nerves' and routine office doldrums... They know that Cunard presents the colorful diversion of the West Indies at less than summer vacation prices. They are the pioneers of a new vacation movement... and the roomy comfort of Cunard staterooms... the suave perfection of Cunard service... the gala atmosphere of Cunard lounges and verandah cafés... these are demanded by the modern vacationist as necessary holiday equipment.

VARIED ITINERARIES INCLUDING San Juan, Santiago, Santo Domingo, Port-au-Prince, St. Pierre, Fort de France, Barbados, Trinidad, La Guayra, Curacao, Colon, Kingston, Havana, Nassau, Bermuda.

Winter Carnivals

...in old QUEBEC

FOUR WINTER CARNIVALS...all frolicsome, all fun for spirited folk who like a tingle in their blood.

Fête de Nuit, Jan. 20: Québec snowshoe clubs besiege the old Citadel with fireworks...the King's garrison defend it...snow-fight with rockets...exciting! Bright blanket coats out, flambeaux and red fire aflame.

Ice Pageant, Feb. 12-13: An ice ballet of breath-taking beauty, put on by the fancy-skating élite of Canada. The whole carnival a brilliant social event.

Dog Sled Derby, Feb. 20-21-22: Forty miles each day run behind dog teams, no matter what the weather conditions... bigger prize money than ever this year, and more entries... sportsmen come from all over the world to see this event.

Bal Masque, Feb. 21: A great costume ball at the Chateau...the party that tops off the gaiety of Dog Sled Derby week.

We warn you, make your reservations now! Madame Québec has a house-full of merrymakers all winter long, and even the big warm Chateau has a hard time to house them during fête weeks.

Chateau Frontenac

SMART NEW YORK ENTERTAINS

Nowhere do smart New Yorkers entertain as thoroughly as they desire than at their own St. Regis. Hence, the city's discriminating visitors seek it as their New York residence... knowing that smart New York's patronage sponsors only what is newest and gayest... Urban's fantasy on the Roof, the brilliance of illuminated mosaic in the Salle-Cathay, the ebb and flow of Lopez dance rhythms in the Seaglade. Thus, the established St. Regis graciousness attends smart New Yorkers and their out-of-town contemporaries.

CONTINENT-COVERING CANDY

Travelers are still registering surprise that Whitman's chocolates, bought in the most distant parts of the continent, are up to the high mark of the same candies bought in New York or Chicago. People who live in distant parts have long ago learned that the stock of Whitman's in the local store is handled with care and sold with dispatch.

Not satisfied only to make fine chocolates right, Whitman's have built up a distribution through a network of selected agencies (nearly twenty thousand careful merchants). Each one serves fresh candies and is supplied direct from Whitman's.

Because of their popularity, Whitman's do not linger on the dealers' shelves. Success begets success. Every fresh and pleasing package sold increases the prestige of Whitman's. We take every possible care to see that the quality put into every package remains until the candy is eaten. Whitman's is the quality candy most called for—and is therefore freshest. Each package is doubly guaranteed—by us and by the dealer.

To send Whitman's quickly to distant points, step into the nearest Postal Telegraph office and file your order. A uniformed messenger will deliver the package.

VOGUE'S-EYE VIEW OF THE MODE IN 1909

AND WE can remember when the word camisole began to supersede corset cover as slightly more chic. We can remember when women wore wire rats to build out their pompadours or saved their combings to use instead. We can remember when ladies picked up their skirts daintily in front to run up-stairs, and the froufrou of a gaily coloured taffeta petticoat was a sign of feminine elegance.

We can remember when one long hatpin was smarter than two short ones, and it was more chic to hold your skirt firmly on the left side than lightly on both. We can remember when high champagne coloured kid boots with French heels were most distinctive for daytime, and when a "short" skirt meant one that came to your shoe tops. We can remember when guimpes and Ferris waists and flannel petticoats were in every little girl's wardrobe. We can remember when a large black beaver hat was a winter classic. We can remember when silk caps to match your evening gowns were worn to the theatre.

We can remember when petticoats were stiffly starched so that skirts would stand out, and when beaded kid slippers were very good for formal wear. We can remember when women talked of high-necked dinner-dresses and skirt braid and calling costumes and lace parasols and automobile coats. We can remember when women wore all of these things and looked very charming, too.

Paris when one lives there

There is a vast and overwhelming psychological difference between the American woman who intends to live in Paris and the casual visitor from America.

The casual visitor is a sightseer, shopper, passer through, or, as a rule, all three together (besides being an eater and drinker), in one of the most beautiful cities of the world, where there are certain definite things that she feels have to be done. Her time, long or short, is taken up in seeing the sights she wants or feels she ought to see; going into every conceivable nook or cranny where the antique or modern can be looked at and bought; looking at, trying on, and fitting clothes, then taking them back to begin again, in the wild hope of making them better; eating and drinking in restaurants, cafés, and bars, large and pretentious or small and whispered about (the kind that for some inconceivable reason, you quite naively believe no one else has ever heard of); and, of course, seeing friends, French or American, and doing and seeing what they want to do and see. It is all exciting and amusing (if exhausting), even to an old-timer who does it once or twice every year. The climate and the breakfasts, unless you have come there to make a study of just such things, pass by almost unnoted. They are thought comic or "atmosphere" by those who aren't going to live with them.

Arriving in Paris, to live there, is quite another matter, and the first month is likely to be a series of dreary disillusion. Under such circumstances, the city is no longer simply a ville d'eau, with complications from which you can flee at will. It is a place in which you are to face all the annoyances of daily life, just as you might face them in New York or Indianapolis or San Francisco. It is only after three or four months or even longer that the pleasant lotus-eater quality of the place steals over you—all the easiness of the life, the laziness of it, the variety of the people passing through, the agreeable superficial contacts, and the marvellous fact that it only takes a few hours to go from Paris to almost any place you may want to visit.

Before that, a mental readjustment must take place.

This Paris is a place in which you are to live. This grey sky, this dampness are permanent and must be reckoned with; so must the fact that the central heating works only in warm weather, that the lifts are out of order half the time, even in the most luxurious of apartments, that you are nearly always tired, and that the apartment of your dreams may rapidly assume the qualities of a nightmare. Glamour may be there, but continual glamour loses its brilliance, and what is amusing for a week may grow to be a bore in a year. Sights and people, seen and unseen, food eaten and uneaten, shops visited and unvisited, are always there and can be visited this afternoon, to-morrow, next month, next year. The lassitude, which is the charm of Paris as of a ville d'eau, be-

after the cook's tour

comes an all-enveloping vice. Nervous energy can be pulled out of the air in New York, but, in damp Paris, it is a thing that must be worked over and renewed.

The first thing to do, quite obviously, is to find a place in which to live. This is not easy. If you are there for a short time and can afford it, an apartment, very satisfactory, luxurious, and charmingly furnished, can be easily rented from an American friend; the price will be American (perhaps more than American). Servants generally go with the apartment. It is all comparatively simple, but it isn't quite what you'd do if you were going to live in Paris. That is obviously a different matter. The apartment must be taken for an indefinite period, not subject merely to the return of a friend, and, unless you are many times a millionaire, it must be taken at a lower rent. It is, as a rule, more practical to start with a furnished apartment, for it gives you time to decide where you want to live in Paris, to look about for the perfect unfurnished one, and to buy furniture.

The next question is how to go about it. Every one has a long-suffering friend in Paris whom she believes gifted with omniscience, armed with addresses of every conceivable nature, from all the available apartments in all Paris to the "little woman" who can make a dress for three hundred francs which shoumake Madame Chanel throw up her hands and her business in despair. She or he (but it's always she) is applied to at once. "Why not go to an Agence?" is her answer, if she is wise and practical (although knowing from experience that it is the last advice you will take).

If, on the other hand, she is of the species that always knows, her answer will in all probability be, "I've just heard of a perfect one for you on the Left Bank—very old and very cheap."

Any one who has ever been in Paris for any length of time will know of the subtle intellectual snobbery connected with the Left Bank of the Seine, and many will be willing to live in streets so damp and commonplace as to be almost uninhabitable in order to make it their address. There is no doubt that on the Left Bank are the most beautiful and glamorous places to be found in Paris, but there is also no doubt that the best are virtually impossible to secure, and that the second best are squalid.

It seems far too good to be true (and generally is) that such a plum should be handed out to the eager settler at the very first attempt. Wild with hope, the spot is rushed to. It is, indeed, on the Left Bank, in the desolate reaches of Montparnasse, but certainly not on the Seine. The street is a combination of smells, picture-frame dealers, and dingy Edwardian apartments. The apartment desiq-

the all too french apartment

nated is, however, really old and above one of the picture-frame dealers; in fact, in a dark little court behind his shop. The façade is quite commonplace. The danger and the dirt of the stairs give further evidence of antiquity. Gasping up the rickety five flights, you whisper to yourself, "It must be really old and fascinating" in order to keep up a waning courage. The apartment has six dark, small rooms, one large dark one, atrocious plumbing, and is unfurnished. Impossible.

The next day (after a sleepless night) comes inspiration. Why not consult the teacher with whom you are toning up your French? She is French, thrifty, just the person. And so, for a breathless period, she seems to be. Her eyes gleam. "Why yes, the very thing!" She has a friend, a retired actress who played with Réjane, who has an apartment that she is very anxious to rent, as her children are married and she has lost her money in the War. This appears to be the moment of ultimate triumph. Visions of endless "atmosphere," eighteenth-century boiserie, float before your vision, and with it the dazzling thought (it is before you have tried to find regular enjoyment in the contemporary French theatre) that a door to the French theatrical world may be opening to you—through association.

The address is in old Passy. Charming enough (if not the Left Bank), with the rue Raynouard, the crest of the hill looking over the city, the lovely old Château de Passy. The apartment is not on the rue Raynouard, but near to it—that is, off it. If you have the misfortune to have to study the advertisements of Paris apartments in the daily papers, you will very soon notice that no apartment is ever on, but always near, and what an infinite difference in the meaning of the words! In Paris, slums have an odd way of hiding just behind the façades of magnificent avenues.

MARIE ALPHONSINE

ROSE VALOIS

Straw woven like tweed carries the chic feeling of fabric hats into the spring mode. The Marie Alphonsine hat, "No. 26," shown on the opposite page, is of a woven tweed-like straw in natural colour, red, and brown, with a brown leather band encircling the crown. The brim is wider on one side than the other and dips becomingly. An ensemble of cream coloured matelassé, from Schiaparelli, is shown with the hat, completing a very smart costume for Southern wear this winter or for wear during the warmer days of spring and summer in the North

Rose Valois designed the hat of rough natural straw shown in the photograph above—a wide cloche, which she calls "Bayonne." It is banded with a gay green-and-red striped linen ribbon, which catches up the brim in back and is tied in a perky little knot; from Stewart. With it is worn a dress of heavy pale blue shantung from Chantal—a model with a soft, crushed collar and an interesting zigzag line at the back, equally charming for winter wear at Palm Beach, on the Riviera, in the West Indies, or for summer wear at any of the numerous smart resorts

"Écume" is a chic and practical two-piece bathing-suit from Yteb, of heavy, crêpy white woolen. The step-in top, with a deep back décolletage, and the shorts are edged with braid; Franklin Simon

THE new tendency in beach clothes, that created so much interest at Antibes and the Lido last summer, has been further developed by the French couturiers. The more masculine the better, is the motto: long trousers for the women, variations on the sailor's jumper, the fisherman's blouse, the mechanic's overalls, and on Boy Scout shirts and shorts.

The smartest fabrics for these garments come from the men's departments. Hélène Yrande and Hermès use the grey English flannel worn by so many Oxford men. Hermès also makes enchanting beach costumes of Tissu Equatorial, with a rough serge weave, used for men's costumes in the Colonies, and the real toile à matelot, washed and pounded to soften its colour and make it more amenable, also is used.

Fabrics from the decoration section are diverted from their original uses. Yteb has selected a striped cotton rep for a beach peignoir, Schiaparelli uses fabrics from the Rodier upholstery collection, and Hélène Yrande and others make much of Bianchini's printed linen.

THE little train from Coire whistles around another curve, and Saint Moritz is in sight. The crowded station, a short ride up the hill in the bright, crisp air, and then the entrance to the Palace, with restive horses, tinkling sleighs, dogs, skis, and guides gathered about. Exactly like a lumber camp town, it seems. Only Indians and Canadian mounted police are needed for a gigantic and amateur first act of "Rose Marie." Everywhere are sombre colours—the darkest of navy-blues and black—with bright accents, bulky silhouettes, big, clumping shoes, trousers, and woolly mittens. Everywhere skis; skis tucked in the back of sleighs, hung over the shoulders; skis under the feet of wool-wrapped children, under the swift, moving feet of experts, and under the awkward and sometimes dangerous feet of beginners. Parts of the icy roads themselves are dangerous, even to pedestrians; you don't have to fall from skis to break your bones.

Inside the busy, warm, cheerful hotel, the mise en scene is less rugged. For every smart woman's Saint Moritz trunks . . . or Quebec or Lake Placid trunks, for that matter . . . carry both indoor and outdoor sports clothes. On snowy days, when any serious sport is impossible, or for tea, bridge, and winter gossip, regulation sports dresses in brighter colours replace the inevitable navy-blue or black jackets and trousers of the outdoor world. ## LADIES IN THE WINTER OF 1929

THE recent change in fashions has been so great that even those who pretend not to notice the whimsicalities of the current vogues have been forced to open their unwilling eyes and notice the drastic alterations that have taken place; that waists have again appeared where they were placed by Nature; that a fanciful elaboration has appeared in place of stark simplicity; and that, once again, little mice-like feet peep out from under chiffon flounces. As there is, always was, and always will be, each time a change is made, so, now, there are to be heard cries of fury and petulance, objections and impotent shrieks, raised by people who thereby show themselves to be biased, uncontemporary, and lacking in courage or decision, foolishly considering it possible to fight against the times in which they live. They fail to realize in how much more important ways they might spend their energies, allowing the times to perfect themselves—instead of they the times. "No martyrdom, however fine, no satire, however splendidly bitter, has changed by a little tittle the known tendency of things." When, for the first time, pantalettes were seen beneath crinolines, old heads were hidden in in rage behind trembling fans. Gloved hands were raised in horror at the first sight of a bustle. The hobble skirt was pooh-poohed, and, when the utilitarianly short skirt appeared, screams of abuse again rent the air, and not very intelligent ladies in their smouldering thousands were heard to say they would rather die than expose their legs. Yet, these are the very same women who fight against the new, flowing, gracefulnesses—gowns like the three Chanel models from Hattie Carnegie shown in the sketch on this page. Fashion is not controlled or prejudiced by screaming abuses or laws and rules of thumb, and, though for a time she may continue on her simple, practical path in the trend of modern life, she will suddenly become tired of being significant of the age—and will branch out into blossoming paths of her own whimsy. She will want to trim a machine with dogroses—and this is what has happened to-day. Nothing could be more significant of the great machine age in which we live, nothing more symbolic of our sophisticatedly simplified way of living than the simple, straight, little evening frocks of last year. An interesting new point in chic is that the mink coat is now worn in the country, complemented by such accessories as hats and shoes with a decided sports feeling. Smart examples of this have been noticed at recent sporting events. At the United Hunts Meet, Miss Diana Dodge wore a mink coat, and this same fashion was seen at the West Hills Meet, adopted by Mrs. John Mackay, Mrs. James Burden, Mrs. Robert McAdoo, Mrs. Edward Voss, and Mrs. Allan Ryan. # Skiing

THE traveller on the Paris-Orient Express bound for Vienna or Budapest who looks out of the car-window after passing through the long Arlberg tunnel receives a faint shock of surprise as the train slows down at the little station, Saint Anton-am-Arlberg.

Steep snow-covered slopes rise abruptly from the station platform, as high as the eye can see, and at their foot is assembled a mysterious army of two or three hundred animated figures, all in uniforms of dark blue or beige, bearing as many wooden spears over their shoulders as in a painting by Benozzo Gozzoli. The pale-faced traveller, as he orders his breakfast in the wagon restaurant, speculates idly what it is all about; the train pulls on through snowy mountain ravines and pine forests towards Innsbruck, and the picture is forgotten. He does not know that he has passed through a little kingdom, that all un-awares he has seen the king and his ministry and his ever-growing band of faithful subjects.

Saint Anton—the Saint Moritz of Austria—is the home of Hannes Schneider, and Hannes Schneider is the great leader and teacher of the famous Arlberg School of Skiing. In the last few years, he has become so renowned that the English, the Dutch, and the Germans flock to Tyrol to learn to ski under the master himself.

Promptly at ten o'clock every morning in Saint Anton, from January to April, all the Hannes Schneider pupils assemble on the little field across the Saint Christoph road. The Hotel Post, the Schwarzen Adler, each and every pension, disgorge their guests as hurriedly as though the Pied Piper were calling them—no one dreams of being late.

The newcomer looks rather wistfully at all the dark sunburned faces and lingers shyly on the edge of the crowd. He is not quite sure whether to stick his skis in the snow or carry them purposefully over his shoulders. A kind, broad Dutch girl in a trim jacket and trousers of pale beige, with a dark blue beret on her square-cut blond hair, takes the newcomer in charge. "Now you will find out where you belong—there is Hannes!"

The king himself has arrived without pomp or ceremony, a dark, dominating man with black curly hair and a wide humorous mouth. Americans would at once say there was something of the Indian about him, but, to

by
ALICE DAMROSCH PENNINGTON

Austrians, he is more Spanish or gipsy in type. He has the broad forward-thrusting shoulders and slightly bent knees of the typical mountaineer.

Under his quiet direction, in two or three minutes the army of skiers has assorted itself and without any confusion marches away with the eighteen different teachers to the many practice slopes. The Dutch girl waves good-bye to the newcomer; "I've been promoted to the 'Cannon-balls,' and I don't dare waste a minute!" About fifteen cannon-balls follow graceful little Schuler, the best skier under Hannes, up to a slope so steep that it is difficult to see how a fly could cling to it—far less a human being.

Schneider settles one or two questions in quiet German before he finally turns to the newcomers.

"The Baroness von Arnheim asks," inquires a large, belligerent-looking man, "whether she can stop doing stem bogen. For sixteen days, four hours every day, the Baroness has practised nothing but stem bogen, and she is bored and wishes a change."

Hannes Schneider frowns mildly and answers: "Yesterday, I watched the Baroness in her class, and she does not yet know her stem bogen. She had better continue until she has learned them."

And then a teacher inquires perplexedly, "There are two Englishmen in my class who do not speak one word of German. How can I teach them to bend their knees if they can't understand me?" To this question, Schneider is reported to have answered, "Any one who can not understand what 'Tiefe in die Hocke' means had better not come to Arlberg." But this is gossip!

The newcomers are then questioned and falteringly or proudly, according to their temperaments, show what they can do. Woe betide the careless visitor who executes a telemark as a mark of his prowess. A deathly silence or hoot of derision from the other skiers will be the only comment. The Arlberg school is based on the stem bogen and the stem christiania, and no telemark is taught to any pupil.

Every one is now placed in a class, and, for two hours, the slopes—and every skier will attest to their steepness—are covered with the hard-working pupils. The Countess Milec is sixty- (Continued on page 88)

"I take my pen in hand"

SMARTNESS and elegance in writing-paper are qualities so instantly apparent that a sheet of letter-paper gives one something of the feeling that is given by a person's face. It is either well-bred or it isn't; there is no perhaps about it. If it is distinguished, it may, like a face, have variations and graduations of distinction—there is the delicate old-fashioned face, the sophisticated face, and a dozen more, utterly different, yet all bearing the same hall-mark of elegance. So there is exquisite, slightly grande-dame letter-paper, there is modern and modernist, or faintly flippant, or very woman-of-the-world letter-paper, every one with the same air of being tremendously au fait. Whether the oblong sheet has a certain this-year-of-grace look and a light scent of L'Heure Bleue, or is fragile with the fragility of the faubourg Saint-Germain in the 'Eighties, it may—and should—bear the stamp of the ineffably correct.

Part of distinction in letter-paper lies in its being suited to its environment. Large, commodious sheets with bold open lettering speak the hearty capacious country house and seem to hint of horses, hounds, and broad fields. A thin and crackly blue page, with an address placed to the side at the top of the page, in silver French lettering, on the other hand, gives a feeling of the small, very chic, very modern apartment in town and of its soignée occupant.

The line between country and city is very clearly defined in smart letter-paper. Paper for the city is smaller and its address more concise. People in the larger (Continued on page 100)

Furness Bermuda Line

The top photograph shows Mr. and Mrs. Samuel W. Andrews's old Bermuda house, to which several rooms have been added, giving all one could wish for in modern comfort and space without sacrificing its original charm

Snug little houses hugging the ground, each one with its own great chimney made of huge blocks of white coral, are typical examples of the delightful architecture to be found in the towns that dot the island of Bermuda

BERMUDA

BY MRS. GEORGE DRAPER

ONLY half awake after our dancing party of the night before, I boarded the Bermuda on one of those raw New York winter mornings that make one wonder whether the Indians weren't wise when they sold Manhattan to Peter Minuit for twenty-four dollars.

Daisy, who was to be my hostess in Bermuda, took to her bed at once with a bad cold, but I was up every minute and thoroughly enjoyed myself. There was just enough sea to make a moderately good sailor happy; the decks were wide; and, by Sunday morning, the weather was warm enough to make one want to stay outside. The swimmingpool was big; and my cabin was well ventilated, even though it was "inside," and thoroughly comfortable, though I paid only about a hundred and twenty dollars for the round trip.

On Monday morning when we woke lying off the north end of Bermuda at Saint George's, the air was like a delightful warm September day. On the brilliant blue sea floated a flat, green-topped island with little white houses like square-cut snowflakes perched up on the rocks. Later, we all came on deck to watch the Captain manoeuvre his big ship in and out among the reefs, where the sea lightened to (Continued on page 94)

Distinguished simplicity marks the house at the right, with its "welcoming arms" steps, its heavy coins at the corners, and its unexpectedly high ceilings. This house holds many suggestions for a sophisticated week-end house

The photograph below shows the view from Gibb's Lighthouse—a heavenly view of gay flowers, sapphire-blue water, and dead-white roofs, with the many green islands dotting the harbour seen over the tops of the cedar-trees

• "The Young Triton," originally designed as a fountain figure, serves as decorative garden sculpture on Carl Milles's own estate at Lindingoe, Sweden. The fluted base of black granite is an integral part of the conception and exemplifies the artist's essentially decorative point of view

• A replica of "The Tritons," which is shown at the top of the opposite page, has been recently placed in Chicago, a gift to the city from a group of Swedish-American business men. The original is in the sculptor's own garden at Lindingoe near Stockholm. As in all of Milles's fountains, the play and fall of the water are essential ingredients in the design of the whole

THE WORK OF CARL MILLES

BY HELEN APPLETON READ

THE mysticism, humour, and fine fantasy of Scandinavian folk-lore, the Norseman's nostalgia for the South, and Stockholm's cultural eclecticism are aesthetic elements that compose the work of Carl Milles. This celebrated Swedish sculptor recently held the first American exhibition of his work at the Fifty-Sixth Street Galleries, New York. A representative collection of his work would be difficult to make outside of his native country, since much of his most important expression takes the form of monumental sculpture commemorating the deeds of national heroes and benefactors. Such a symposium, if we could have it, would be found to be composed of the gods and goddesses of classical antiquity, the naiads and trolls of Norse mythology, and racy, sometimes humorous, characterizations of such national heroes as the celebrated Sten Sture and Gustavus Vasa. Milles's eclecticism extends to his style and technique, as well, which, without loss of individual statement, he varies to suit his choice of subject-matter.

In common with all sculptors of northern Europe, Milles is a passionate worshipper of the classic tradition—but not to the extent of submerging his personality in the classic ideal. Alone of the northern sculptors of his generation, he has been able to preserve his native fantasy and racial quality in a classic form without losing the native quality or producing a lifeless copy of the antique. Carl Milles has been described as a sculptor who (Continued on page 90)

MADAME PERRIAND'S

STUDIO APARTMENT

MADAME Charlotte Perriand, whose interesting studio apartment is shown in the photographs on these two pages, has the distinction of being the only woman designer admitted to the inner circle of the avant-garde of architect designers in Paris. What Berthe Morisot was to the Impressionist movement, Madame Perriand is to the modern movement in architecture. Still in her early twenties and exhibiting for the first time in the 1927 Salon des Artistes Décorateurs, her special and rather remarkable talents were soon recognized, and she is now collaborating with Le Corbusier in designing furniture and interiors for his modern villas.

Madame Perriand's studio apartment, under the eaves of an old house on the rue Bonaparte, that street so suggestive of Paris of a century or two ago, is a demonstration of her aesthetic point of view. She has not attempted to conceal the fact that she is grafting modern decoration on an old background, but has used such architectural features as dormer-windows and a mansard roof as integral parts of her decorative scheme, a method used by modern decorators with marked success. In amusing contrast to the emphatic modernity of the rooms is the view of old Paris seen through the bedroom window. The scheme of this room is grey, white, and black. The corner under the eaves is ingeniously utilized for a couch and the typical built-in cupboards. The ceiling grades down in equally proportioned tiers, allowing for a decorative and practical arrangement of set-in lighting fixtures. The rugs and bedspread are of hand-woven wool in tones of black and white. A built-in bookcase is used as a headboard for the couch bed.

The dining-room in this same apartment has something of the impersonality of a cafeteria, but, with practicability, no ornamentation, hygiene, and the use of new material as guiding principles of the radical moderns, it is difficult to create an intimate atmosphere in the old sense. The dining-room table and chairs are of metal, the chairs upholstered in green leather. Another corner under the eaves is ingeniously used for the bar, without which no modern French apartment is complete. The bar, stools, and chairs are of polished metal, and on one side of the room is one of the deep, comfortable, built-in sofas that are such favourites with modern decorators. The general impression given by the apartment as a whole is one of a severe and practical simplicity with every bit of space possible utilized for cupboards and shelves.

MADAME PERRIAND'S DINING-ROOM

Rep, Paris

ONE CORNER OF THE BED-ROOM

Mrs. van Heukelon wears a black broadcloth coat from Vionnet, which has a Persian lamb collar. Her Reboux toque, of black and green velvet, is draped so that it does not interfere with flare of wide collar. The wrist-to-elbow cuffs are very important; white suède gloves and diamond bracelets add elegance

The Marquise Strozzi (at right) had Lucienne, from Reboux, shape this smart black felt hat on her head so that it would carry out the classic feeling of her tailored suit. Wings give width to the front of the simple crown. The three-quarter length gloves, wrinkled and pulled up over the sleeve cuff, are chic details

THE 'RIGHT' HAT FOR THE COLLAR

A WOMAN may wear a beautiful coat, she may have chosen a most becoming dress, the colour may be perfect—yet, if her hat is wrong, her whole appearance is spoiled. The hat must not only be smart and well made in itself, but—and here are the points of greatest importance—it must be made on the owner's head, and it must be made with the neck-line taken into consideration. The development taken by fur scarfs and, especially, fur collars that reach overpowering proportions, makes the hat problem very complicated.

No more are hat wings allowed to come down very low, for they would interfere with large winter collars. They have been turned up, reduced, and fastened in place. Hats still keep their deeply cut fronts and strong backward and sideways feeling, but the Parisian artists have produced clever shapes that are equally comfortable to wear "over" and "under" winter scarfs and furs.

The question of sleeves is not a matter to be ignored. Gloves give the finishing touch, either to a very formal or a casual attire. Always long, much too long to cover only the hand and wrist, they are sometimes pulled over the cuffless sleeves, sometimes wrinkled under the loose, heavy fur cuff, but, in any case their rôle is one of elegance unadorned.

Madame Chiesa attended a tea in Paris, wearing this new and interesting toque. It was made by Madame Agnès, of black cellophane lace. An amusing treatment gives a narrow finish at the back, covered by the large black fox collar. The pinkish-beige antelope gloves are effective with the fox cuffs of her coat

Mademoiselle de l'Espée (left) wears a chic Worth sports ensemble with its scarf and a hat of the same soft brown, beige, and red tweed. The hat is one of Maria Guy's smartest models, covering the nape of the neck without back length. Over plain pigskin gloves, Cartier's gold and leather sports watch is clasped

For travelling, Princesse Jean-Louis de Faucigny-Lucinge (below) wears a tweed suit from Lucien Lelong and a tweed beret from Rose Valois. The beret, with its little felt bow, is so softly supple that its fulness does not interfere with the beaver collar. Jade bracelets are worn over beige antelope gloves

a catastrophe? or a blessing?

BE consoled, Nadine. The situation is trying, I grant, and what is worrying you, far from growing less, is going to be more of a problem from year to year. The new vibrant spirit that animates the mode is taking possession of it. A catastrophe? Or a blessing?

Certain years in the history of fashion, notable for the grace and originality of the clothes they have produced, have defied oblivion. Certain dates—1830, 1880, 1890—evoke images, awaken poignant memories: we recognize in them a style, a personality, something almost human. The mode is so close to woman, woman so close to destiny!

And now, 1929—or, more certainly, 1930—is determined not to die. These revolutionary years that aspire to glory try to make us deny our old customs. Without a scruple, they sweep away the standards to which we were conforming. First, they destroy the outward form, then the spirit that gave it shape. Farewell the straight lines, squared or rectangular, the easy give-and-take, our dearly won freedom. Farewell frankness, farewell comradeship free from jealousy—something that could exist between women who could not be distinguished one from the other; between men and women undisturbed by the complications that arise from coquetry.

Already, we are beginning to question those beliefs that a year ago we still held dear. Our old silhouettes, stalking through the mists of the past, seem to have lost something of their former harmony, seem positively funny. We almost laugh at the long, straight line of the bodices, the skirts cut short and straight, just below the knees; above all, at the boarding-school aspect of simplicity and uniformity. And, yet, we thought ourselves charming.

"What? Change?" said the Parisian (and you, Nadine, said the same). "But, why? Why, if we have found the utterly blissful state of existence, if we have learned to acquire grace without effort; if our clothes and our coiffures are young, becoming, and discreet; practical and adequate to our lives? The perfect expression of our modern souls?"

The average woman adored this mode, because, as she explained, she was always sure of herself—there was not much of a margin for error. You followed certain set rules, and you couldn't go far wrong. Or, if you were wrong, the world was wrong with you. There was never the danger of being ridiculous, and it didn't much matter whether you were seventeen or fifty; ages were practically interchangeable. Real beauty, of course, could not be concealed, but it was never enhanced; mediocrity was nearly as much of an asset as good looks.

"All these new fashions are pretentious, inconvenient," Nadine complains. "I go to dine with some friends. It rains, and I am cold, for my short coat doesn't begin to cover me. My skirt is too long, I don't even know how to walk any more, and it is impossible to step out of a car without getting splashed. And how should one go up a staircase? My husband sighs and grumbles, 'This hair that must be curled up on the ends, these dresses that must be fastened. A few more excuses for arriving late!' My partners complain of panels that trail in all directions, and there is an awful moment when I think I am going to lose my balance. Besides, I can't go into a drawing-room or a restaurant without feeling terribly conspicuous, conscious of stares and criticisms.

"The other night, I went to dinner in a new dress, feeling just a little excited and pleased, and my friends, who have not yet had the courage to abandon the old proportions, made fun of me. 'Are you trying to launch the new fashion, Nadine?' they said. And, 'You were so much nicer with your short little skirts,' the men complained. 'Are you trying to create a type of your own?' asked one woman. 'Whom are you trying to please in this new garb?' said another.

"Ah, who indeed is one trying to please? One tries to find a dress in the collection that looks new, yet one that will seem familiar enough in the drawing-room. A dress so perfect that at first it will pass unnoticed, its merits gradually appreciated, bit by bit. There was, of course, that one man at dinner the other night, a rather distinguished-looking old fellow, on whom my new dress seemed not utterly lost.

"One can not wear last year's dresses—there is nothing to be done with them. One feels at first that the new dresses were created only for the very slim. One wonders how Aunt X., who was such a beauty in 1900, would look in them, or how they would (Continued on page 86)

JACKETS AGAIN GO SOUTHWARD

JEAN PATOU

Patou uses a wool crêpe romain, called "wool flower," for the ensemble "Jonquille," shown at the left, above. Vertical lines, obtained through cut on tweed dresses and through pleats on lighter-weight models, are a conspicuous feature of this house. The model has piqué trimming

PREMET

In "Coup de Soleil, No. 23," the ensemble in the middle, above, the soft yellow tone of the crêpe de Chine frock is offset by the black, white, and yellow stripes of the heavy linen sleeveless cardigan. The frock has a belted waist-line and an unusual arrangement of pleats on the skirt

JEAN PATOU

An interesting study in vertical and horizontal lines is "Lavande," the lavender-blue ensemble shown at the right, above. The skirt of the frock is one box pleat after another, proving that the box pleat is still excellent in resort fashions. The bows are of self-material; model from Franklin Simon

LANVIN

CLAIRE ANY

The "Saint-Germain" of Claire Any is the two-piece ensemble sketched in the middle, above. It is of a heavy shantung in pale rose, with white piqué cuffs tying about the wrists and a white piqué collar ending in a flower-like knot. The bolero cut at the back is interesting; Franklin Simon

MARTIAL ET ARMAND

The model, "Me Veux-Tu," shown at the right, above, is of voile-de-laine, in a black-and-white mixture. The sweater blouse is much shorter than the blouses of last season, so as to heighten the effect of length in the skirt. The belted blouse may be worn with or without the circular cape

FASHIONS FROM THE RIVIERA

VOGUE POINTS ABOUT PALM BEACH FABRICS AND FASHIONS

THE COOLIE SUIT of black and white drill cloth is another of the simple new costumes which take on great sophistication for the beach; from Stewart. SAILOR TROUSERS are abandoning the high seas for the shifting sands. Of white duck and in combination with the sleeveless striped shirt of Riviera fishermen, they join the feminine mode of wearing masculine fashions at Antibes; from Best. SILK JERSEY is the newest fabric for bathing-suits. The seated figure at the right in the sketch is wearing a model of orange jersey with a beach coat of terry-cloth, yellow on the outside and orange on the inside; model from Best

SHIRTMAKERS are receiving due recognition by the mode, this season. In the sketch below is shown a sleeveless sports dress of white silk broadcloth, which was made by the French shirt-maker, d'Ahetze. The recognition is justified, for this model combines practicality with great chic. The stitched collar, finished by a bow of the fabric, echoes the stitched yoke of the box pleated skirt, which defines the natural waist-line; model from Best

COTTON TWEED, which resembles wool tweed, is a smart new material. It fashions this unusual suit, which has a belted jacket that is a glorified version of the lumberman's jacket. The skirt has godets, the blouse is a simple jersey; Lord and Taylor. THE REDINGOTE of French ancestry is exceedingly smart when developed in cream coloured wool, as in the model shown at the right, above. It was designed by Chanel, who wears it herself in navy-blue wool as do several of the smartest of Parisiennes. For Palm Beach or such mid-southern resorts as Aiken, as well as for northern wear when warmer weather comes, this coat is both smart and practical; from Best

SEEN IN THE SHOPS FOR EVENING

Reading from left to right above are, first, an informal dinner-dress of soft blue and mauve-pink imported printed chiffon with a low back and flowing sleeves, and, next, a printed crêpe dress with a flower in bright red on white; Stewart. Next is an Augustabernard ensemble of green flat crêpe with a simple classic dress and a cape lined in beige crêpe; Bergdorf Goodman. The long-sleeved black chiffon dinner-dress, next, is moulded to the knees by horizontal tucks; Lord and Taylor. An ensemble of orange chiffon has a shirred three-quarters length coat; Stewart. Last is the chic honey-beige lapin coat; Franklin Simon.

SHOPPERS, at this time of year, are, like all Gaul, divided into three parts. There are those who are going North for winter sports, those who are going South for summer sports, and those who are staying at home, for—well, indoor sports, a convenient term that can mean almost anything. Yet, although their actual spheres may be poles apart, more or less, their real interests in clothes are so closely allied as to be almost identical in many instances. Every woman observes the new Southern fashions with keen attention, as she knows very well that the lines that are successful at Palm Beach are the ones on which we will fight it out all summer. Then, too, nearly every woman feels that her wardrobe requires a fresh dance or dinner-gown at this time of year, and many of the mid-season evening gowns can appear equally well at Palm Beach or in town.

Among the significant developments of the mode is the growing importance of the informal dinner-dress, which seems to answer a special want. These dresses are long, usually ankle-length, but never with trains, and they may have long sleeves and low décolletages in back or tiny cap sleeves or none at all, with a higher neck-line. They are another instance of the charming variety of the new styles, which permit a woman to dress for dinner or the movies in something that is distinctly not a daytime dress nor yet a formal evening costume.

Both Lord and Taylor and Stewart have a great variety of these frocks, two of which are illustrated on this page. The chiffon one from Lord and Taylor might be chosen in black for the stay-at-home and in pastel colours for the South. The printed chiffon dinner-dress with the low back is essentially new in line and in the colours of its pattern, using soft blue and mauve-pink in rather a large design. Stewart offers a smart assortment of these long-sleeved dinner-dresses.

Suits of light-weight wools or silks with separate tuck-in blouses will be another important fashion this spring, and, long before the real spring, they will appear in Florida and California. It is the newness of the fabric that gives distinction to these suits, the flecked and slightly corded woollens being very smart.

Tiny pin dots are being revived on both silks and woollens, and old-fashioned floral patterns in miniature size and rather widely spaced are charming for the first printed suits of the season. All of the shops have chic versions of this type of suit.

But newest of all—or, rather, oldest of all, but newest from the viewpoint of fashion—are the more formal cotton frocks, sheer printed cottons, eyelet embroidery, and all of the other dear departed fabrics, which have been laid away in lavender since the War. There is a picturesque charm, inherently feminine, about these finer cottons, which suggest Marie Antoinette and her romantic village at the Petit Trianon, while the designs in which they are made are distinctly 1930 in feeling. These cotton frocks, like the two shown on this page, are not only just the thing to wear of an afternoon with a large straw hat, but might even be used for informal dining. Their crispness and freshness combined with an urban sophistication of design make the new cotton frocks delightful paradoxes of the mode.

Best has the most engaging collection of these new cottons, and this shop is doing interesting new things with organdie, as well.

Last year, as early as January, some women wore dresses printed in small designs under their fur coats, and many of the new Southern models could be used effectively this way this season. The small, scattered, bright prints on dark backgrounds are the newest, and, if a printed dress is worn under a fur coat, this type of dark print is the most appropriate. The more formal printed frocks for the South are very often in larger designs, and either in a pure bright colour on white or in the lovely soft Laurençin tones.

The evening wrap that matches the dress is a very important item for a Southern wardrobe. An extremely smart example of this is the Augustabernard ensemble in green crêpe, which is shown on the opposite page. This cape coat is lined in beige crêpe to give additional warmth.

The lapin coat in beige or honey-beige is a favourite in both the North and South, and it has the appropriately casual air that makes it just the wrap for cruising. It is best when cut on simple straight lines with no pretense at great formality, but is a useful and becoming coat to slip on if the night is chilly. An excellent model of this type is sketched at the extreme right of the group on the opposite page, and its three-quarters length and well-cut lines make it a model to grace any wardrobe of the winter season.

THE MODE OF THE MOMENT ISN'T MADE IN A MOMENT TODAY!

The mode is no longer something to hang up or slip into...it is today the exclusive triumph of tailoring and time... and its mandate stretches from city to sea, from the Faubourgs to Florida...Southern Wear is no exception to its exceptional requirements...particularly those colorful little tailored suits that are such an art to make and such a joy to behold! They cannot be bought in a moment in town and succeed for a moment down South...here, if ever, is something that calls for the incomparable workmanship of Stein & Blaine.

ON HER DRESSING-TABLE

SOUTHERN suns are now reviving the burning question, and those who are contemplating Southern resorts are turning to the ways and means of acquiring a painless and beautiful tan. One pleasant aid in this pursuit is Rallet's Palm Beach oil, which not only protects the skin while it is exposed to the sun's rays, but has a most satisfactory way of producing an evenly distributed brown and of avoiding the distressing in-between state of redness. It is delightfully perfumed—indeed, you might be tempted to buy it for its fragrance alone—and comes in smartly shaped bottles. As is the case with all such sunburn preparations, this oil should be smoothed carefully over every inch that is to be exposed before the skin is surrendered to the sun. Rallet's Palm Beach oil is available from Stewart, in New York, and in other large shops.

IN LIGHT OR DARK FINISH

Prince Matchabelli has made an interesting contribution to sunburned beauty, in the form of "Bronzina," a bronze liquid that gives a smooth, even finish to the skin that is just beginning to tan or deepens the shade of an already acquired brown. It may also be used to create a temporary artificial tan where none has existed before. "Bronzina" is a companion product to Prince Matchabelli's "Belila," a liquid that goes to the opposite extreme in creating a gardenia-white finish for arms and neck for evening. Both of these liquids may be obtained at Bergdorf Goodman.

Another item of importance to those who travel, now or at any other time, is the transportation of beauty equipment. Helena Rubinstein, a person who herself spends about a third of her time en voyage by one means of transportation or another, has devised a complete series of travel kits, of varied sizes to meet every occasion, from a round-the-world cruise to a week-end sojourn. One of the most recent of these is called "the busy woman's beauty box" and has been designed for the business woman who travels or for use over the week-end. Into a red lacquered box with mirror top are fitted preparations for cleansing, nourishing, and making up the skin, together with cleansing tissues and cotton for use in the process. And one of the excellent features of this kit is that the contents are varied according to the requirements of the dry and the normal or oily skins. These boxes are moderate in price and may be obtained at Helena Rubinstein's salon or in the shops where her products are available.

Many of the ailments that the scalp is heir to are due to improper shampoos, and the news of a method of shampooing that not only cleanses and beautifies the hair, but is intended to benefit the scalp as well, is an item of interest to many women. Martin from Vienna has introduced a new "soapless shampoo," which has a very pleasant faculty of leaving the hair soft and full of lustre at the same time that it is working to rid the scalp of dandruff and dryness. While this liquid is adapted to various types of scalps, it is proving especially beneficial for the one that is inclined to dryness and for what is known as a "tight" scalp, or one that has poor circulation. In this shampoo, the head is first steamed slightly by means of hot cloths to open the pores, and the liquid is massaged into the scalp and lightly over the hair. Then, the hair is thoroughly rinsed for some time in warm water. "Soapless Shampoo" is available in bottles that contain sufficient liquid for two shampoos, but it is advisable, whenever possible, to go to the salon at Fifth Avenue, between Forty-Fifth and Forty-Sixth Streets, for the initial treatment, in order to learn the best method of procedure.

THE SUN ALSO RISES TO BEAUTY

Most women "this side of thirty and that side of forty" realize that they can do much to keep a soft, youthful skin by the use of good preparations at home. Such wise women will find an aid to double the value of their preparations in a cosmé lamp, offered by Margaret Brainard, through Saks-Fifth Avenue. This lamp, a light, portable affair, approximates the natural light of the sun, but excludes the violet rays that cause sunburn. By holding it in the hand or resting it on the dressing-table, its rays may be directed with soothing, yet invigorating effect on the skin, opening the pores and forcing the salutary creams and lotions deep into the layers of the skin. In the centre of the face of the lamp is a magnifying mirror, which reveals gruesome truths about the individual's complexion, truths, however, that will become less gruesome as she proceeds with this most efficacious treatment.

She is of the fairest English type, with eyes of delphinium blue and hair of gleaming gold.

Her rose-petal skin is admired for its delicacy of texture and coloring. Lady Buchanan-Jardine gives it the utmost care. She says:

"In England a woman's complexion is the index of her chic. Smart women follow a daily régime to keep their skin fine, firm, fresh and clear.

"Simple care is best," she adds with her dazzling smile, "so I follow Pond's Method of home treatment. It is easy and complete."

Lady Buchanan-Jardine uses all Pond's four preparations. Cold Cream "cleanses so thoroughly" . . . Tissues "remove Cream gently" . . . bracing Freshener is "just the skin tonic we all need" . . . Vanishing Cream is "exquisite!"

FOLLOW these simple sure steps of Pond's Method:

During the day—first, for complete cleansing, generously apply Pond's Cold Cream over face and neck. Pat in with quick upward and outward strokes. Let the fine oils penetrate every pore and float the dirt to the surface. Do this several times during the day, always after exposure.

Second—wipe away all cream and dirt with Pond's Cleansing Tissues. They are so much softer, more absorbent.

Third—soak cotton with Pond's Skin Freshener. Briskly dab your skin. This mild astringent banishes oiliness, closes pores, tones, firms.

Last—smooth on Pond's Vanishing Cream for powder base and exquisite finish.

At Bedtime—cleanse your skin thoroughly with Cold Cream and wipe away with Tissues.

become Antoinette, who is so fat. Certainly, they were never planned for my little English cousin, who came over for a week-end without any baggage and wanted to get a dress in two days that she could wear to the theatre. Wasn't life difficult enough without all these complications?"

Ah, Nadine, no doubt you are right, and yet, you astonish me. I suppose you have a conservative spirit, but impetuous, decided. Are you going to be timid in face of this risk, a little cowardly before the unknown? There are new conquests to be made, Nadine. Only, it is important to know yourself, to understand yourself. Difficulties develop talent in the poet, why should they not sharpen a woman's wit?

We were talking of fashion. Would you disregard your beauty, your youth, your charm? Art is never a spontaneous thing. A little girl may be spontaneous, but a woman must study and reflect. In all times—even in the last few years—, there are well-dressed women. Their smartness, Nadine, is never a matter of chance. To be really well dressed is as difficult as to succeed in anything else—in writing a book, painting a picture, giving an excellent dinner. Perfection demands certain gifts, great pains, some science.

THE IMPORTANCE OF BEING FITTED

You must know your good points, Nadine, as well as your weak ones. The present mode has unlimited possibilities, if you know how to take advantage of it. Above all, you must learn the art of being fitted. You must try on the dress before ordering it, and then you must try on your own version of the model as often as necessary—innumerable times, perhaps. Fittings are difficult; they call for strict attention, profound analysis. One must consider that subtle thing called "line," the décolletage, the fit of the shoulders. The slightest detail gone wrong may spoil the effect of the whole.

The majority of women are badly turned out; and that is because they neglect to give proper attention to the fittings; they yawn, their thoughts wander. How right was that American woman we met the other day, who refused all invitations: "I am here for work," she said. "I give myself over to fittings from morning till evening."

I saw her again the other evening, and her clothes are marvellous, for they are exactly as they should be. The waist-line seems in just the right place—not so high that she looks half choked, but seeming to settle down, with a sigh of relief after all its wanderings, in that little curve of the woman's body where the waist-line was ordained to be. She is a beautiful woman, this American, but her hips are not quite the negligible factor that they are in a young girl. So she has had the skirts carefully built up over the hips to the natural waist. It is so important, this gradual narrowing to the waist-line, if the eye is not to be shocked by the new emphasis and proportion. And this section around the hips is really the axis of the present mode; dresses are no longer fitted first on the shoulders, but start from this point. One can't tamper with these lines, once they are mapped out. Drop the waist-line, and all the proportions go wrong.

Her skirts are a comfortable and graceful length. She keeps them below the knee for sports, and wears her slightly habillé day clothes almost halfway down to the ankle. "I never accept a dress," she told me, "until I have walked around in it and sat down in it at least half a dozen times."

Ah, Nadine, do you remember the American who visited Suzanne during the autumn? I went to meet her at tea, and I was so embarrassed. She looked well enough when standing still, but she wore a long, slim dress with a low flare, and, when she walked, the dress crept up, so that her skirt was quite too short, and, when she sat down, it was way up above her knees. She told us that she had put herself in the hands of a French dressmaker and given the matter no further thought. She wanted a complete wardrobe, but she had no intention of spending all her time in Paris over clothes. "I can't be bothered to go for more than two or three fittings," she said, "and I refuse to bother my head about these things. If a French dressmaker doesn't know how I should look, who does?" Well, Nadine, certainly this American wasn't the one who knew how she should look. She seemed perfectly satisfied and content. I saw her one evening chez "Florence"—tripping over skirt draperies that were too long and looking more like an hour-glass than like the lovely Greek statue of which the other oh-so-wise American reminds me. Yet, I am sure that their figures are nearly the same.

You know, Nadine, how you have admired the length of my new fur coat, short enough to allow my skirts to flare a little below? Well, Hélène misinterpreted the new mode entirely and insisted upon having her fur coat made very long—longer, indeed, than her dresses, so that you get the unfortunate impression that her skirts are very short—much shorter than they really are—and that her coat is intended to cover up the gap.

A MATTER FOR COOPERATION

Of course, one can't do the whole trick oneself. It is the fitter who is chiefly responsible; but where is the artist who can properly judge his own work?

Then, there is the vendeuse. She is the one who stands aside, detached, who studies your type, gets the correct silhouette of your figure. I know at least ten women of great taste, who place their destiny in the hands of their devoted vendeuses and even follow them from house to house rather than lose the benefit of their advice.

Yet, it is the woman herself who has the final word. She knows, from daily experience, what is really right for her to wear. She knows, perhaps, that she is never really happy in a square décolletage, that an oval line is so much lovelier with her head and shoulders.

This is the great discovery of the present mode—for each woman, for each type of woman, a different dress. Long ago, Lucienne of Reboux began to build hats on the heads of her clients. To-day, a dress must be made on the body of the woman. The dress that was made on the perfect, but abstract mannequin and that slipped over your own body, with fair ease, is a thing of the past. Only one woman in a hundred—or several hundred—could wear one of the new dresses unless it was made especially for her. And, while the new dress may not obliterate some of your weak points (as well as your good ones), as did the old, the new mode, properly handled, will emphasize your good points so effectively that no one will notice your (Continued on page 88)

A CATASTROPHE? OR A BLESSING?

shortcomings. In any case, there are so many possibilities of concealment—soft, becoming drapery for hard necklines, long skirts for not-too-perfect legs.

You remember, my dear, the story of the good-looking girl who went to the fancy-dress party, dressed in such a way as to bring out her worst points? The bodice so narrow across the shoulders that she looked hunch-backed, bands crossing at such a narrow angle just under her chin that she looked hollow-chested, and then spreading out to give a most deceptive fullness at the waist-line. If one can dress to make oneself hideous, certainly one can reverse the process.

A box pleat gives a straight line to shoulders that are inclined to droop; a very low décolletage makes a much lovelier back than a higher décolletage that catches just under the shoulder-blades and makes them prominent.

So, Nadine, cease your worrying. You are going to have, not an old-fashioned dress, nor a new dress of the newness that is troubling you so much. You are going to have a dress that is right for you—the only type that you can wear properly. You are a personality, an individual; you are the real Nadine. Don't try to be Rose, Claire, or Stephanie, and hard luck on the crowd if it tries to copy you! The present mode is difficult to wear? So much the better; it is created for the chosen few who have the leisure, the tradition to enable them to take it up and adapt it to their needs.

"But," you persist, "the curves?"

These curves of which I am so much afraid. It's one thing to show your legs, but another thing altogether to produce these gracefully curving lines."

But there, again, Nadine, you are criticizing without really knowing what you are talking about. There are so many opportunities for getting the right effect—here a flounce, there a peplum, higher up a fichu. The mode has unlimited resources—stoop to a bit of trickery, be a little feminine.

And now, in passing, we might do away with certain illusions. The new fashion is aging? I've actually heard this point made in the face of a little model with a short bodice and a white collar cut up like flower petals. Only the really young could wear that. On the other hand, the older woman is not forgotten, and no longer is she forced to play the young girl. She is allowed once more the grand manner, and it doesn't matter whether she is fat or thin. Length and fullness come to her rescue.

An impractical fashion? Not necessarily, since you can be simple when simplicity is called for and since sports clothes still remain their perfectly correct selves. Towards tea-time and on into the evening, of course, one sees a definite change. One is free to be a little daring about evening clothes, but, if you feel terrified by the new styles, you can have the dress made in a subdued colour.

Nadine, I have perfect confidence in the soundness of your good taste. I know that you will be varied and lovely during all the hours of the day.

two years old, but that does not alter her absolute determination to learn to ski. In her class, Mr. Gilbreath, of the English Naval Commission, and Herr Director Brandmayer, of the Electrical Works in Berlin, pursue the same course with the same passionate conviction that at the end of the season they will have attained their goal.

Below, on the more modest slopes, the kindergarten classes struggle with "snow plough" and stem bogen, amongst them the Baroness meekly and strenuously commencing her seventeenth day. Further up, the middle classes begin with their first stem christianias. Here, the prostrate forms grow more numerous. A hard worker thinks nothing of twenty or thirty falls a day. In Saint Anton, that region of the anatomy on which one sits is referred to as "the Arlberg Strasse." It is no infrequent occurrence to hear some teacher with the voice of a drill sergeant shouting to some haughty lady: "Don't fall on the Arlberg Strasse. Bend your knees. If you have to fall—fall on your nose!"

A fall down and forward is accounted an honourable tumble, but any terrified slide backwards is scorned.

On the steepest slopes of all, the two crack classes, "the Cannon-balls" under Spiess and Schuler, swing bravely left and right in beautiful stem christianias down steil hangs that seem perpendicular to untrained eyes.

And Hannes Schneider himself makes his leisurely and kingly progress from class to class and comments and criticizes.

"Very good, Herr Doctor. Aber mehr vorlage, but the tempo was good—swing more next time, swing more!" The Herr Doctor, red from exertion and pride, hurries up the slope to try it again before the master's eye.

In the afternoon, two hours more. Hannes Schneider is indeed a genius to keep those different nationalities, personalities, ages, and sexes, with the precision of an army, on those weary practice slopes day in, day out, without a change.

At five o'clock, every one consumes an enormous tea, although there is very little tea about it—mostly hot chocolate and coffee with whipped cream and large honest squares of pastry. It will take another year or two of English invasion to introduce tea and buttered toast to Saint Anton. There is a general atmosphere of contentment and exhaustion in the crowded tea-room of the Hotel Post. The girls wear skiing suits in dark blue or different shades of beige and brown. These seem to be the only solid colours that look well on the snow. There is not a single skiing costume in red or yellow, green or white. Touches of red—yes, and other bits of colour in caps and mufflers, ties and shirts and socks, but no solid id colours except blues and beiges. Practically every one skis in a beret, and there is little fur beyond an occasional Russian cap. In the spring, little caps of white duck are smart.

In the evening, unlike the old comfortable days before the Hotel Post was enlarged, every one dresses for dinner, and the most energetic dance all evening.

The newcomer, with aching limbs and a face smarting from snow burn, retires to bed rather early with an inward conviction that, in the last five minutes of practice, he managed to make a stem bogen. And to-morrow—he dreams—just as Hannes Schneider is passing, it will go better still and he will receive a word of praise from the king himself!

LA SALLE

IT IS the conscientious conviction of Cadillac that La Salle owners are entitled to something even better than the most modern competitive practice affords. They are justified in expecting that steering shall be a little easier than in any other car; gear-shifting simpler, quicker, quieter; that braking shall be positive, certain, instantaneous if need be, and virtually effortless . . . ¶ The development of the new Syncro-Mesh Transmission, Safety-Mechanical Four-Wheel Brakes, the Harmonized Steering System, non-shatterable Security-Plate Glass, and other special features which confer upon La Salle its present superlative measure of easy handling, easy control, and safety, means complete emancipation for the woman who drives . . . ¶ The public's enthusiastic allegiance to Fisher has never been so fully justified as in the rich and regal Fisher and Fleetwood coachwork which adorns these newest LaSalle's. No specious superficial smartness here, but rather a quiet elegance and quality which speaks eloquently to people of refinement and taste and reveals other practice to be disturbingly inadequate in comparison with these luxurious Fisher and Fleetwood creations.

He ought to have a toilet case ...it ought to be the best

IT IS NOT too much to say that no man should be without a toilet case. He needs one at home, and he needs one when he travels. In Stockholm or the Congo . . . in the country, or at his own apartment . . . mirror, razor and brushes are always where they should be. He knows exactly where to find each object, every time. . . . For generations, men with an instinct for the better things in life, have governed their selection of toilet cases by the same rule with which they decide upon all articles of fine leather. If, by some chance, you could see the cases they have chosen, you would almost invariably find them marked with a tiny golden keystone R. . . . That imprint is the house insignia of C. F. Rumpp & Sons, Inc., an establishment devoted to the making of fine leather goods. It assures you . . . as your own appreciation of lovely things will enable you to sense . . . that you can buy no better gift. . . . Holding the case in your hand, you immediately discern its true value. The very feel and fragrance of the leather reflect the finished materials, and expert, unhurried workmanship. . . . For the men who have labored upon these cases have an enviable knowledge of leather . . . a genuine affection for the work of their hands . . . a passion for excellence not too frequent in this world. . . . C. F. Rumpp & Sons, Inc., manufacture fine leather articles of every description, excepting luggage. At the better leather goods stores, department stores, jewelers, and at stationers.

THE BOX-TYPE TOILET CASE is much in favor with those men who travel extensively, especially when the journey will be prolonged. A sturdy metal frame supports the soft goatskin cover . . . the hard rubber fittings in deep red are both attractive and serviceable. The same case also comes in ostrich, pigskin, and other leathers.

A CASUAL INFORMALITY marks this gentleman's set, in sealskin. The case is most complete, having all the articles necessary for both town and country use. Fittings are of hard rubber, the color of mahogany, with or without 14-carat gold mountings for one's initials. The case also is available in ostrich skin.

THE MILITARY BRUSH SET is always in vogue. The man who must leave town on short notice finds it indispensable; small and compact, it requires but little space. The two smart brushes in this set are ebony-backed, with silver mountings. The case is of goatskin, though it may also be had in a variety of other leathers, with other brushes.

THE WORK OF CARL MILLES

turns his face to the sun, but keeps his feet firmly planted in his native soil.

It is curious, in view of American art lovers' increasing interest in contemporary sculpture, that an artist who is held in such high esteem by European connoisseurs should have been almost completely ignored in this country. With one exception, when a few small pieces were included in an international group exhibition, Milles's work has not been shown in the United States. This is the more extraordinary when one considers the interest and appreciation that have recently been evinced in other forms of contemporary Swedish art, notably architecture and the decorative arts. So essentially contemporary in feeling is Milles, so sensitive to the trend of the Zeitgeist, that a decade before the modern decorative arts movement was recognized as such, he was already commencing to embody some of its major principles in his work. He was among the first European sculptors to bring sculpture back to the classical tradition, which is to see it in relation to architecture. He advocated the introduction of creative ideas into industry and so was directly responsible for the renaissance of the Swedish decorative arts. He gave his talent generously to the furthering of both ideas. No small part of Stockholm's charming and individual adaptation of the modern spirit is due to Milles's sculpture, which ubiquitously serves as decoration for public buildings, fountains, and monuments. Steeped as he is in the classical ideal of form, lyrical and mystic as his subject may be, a stylized simplification of form and a decorative intention make his work essentially modern in feeling. It is characteristic of Milles's work that it invariably stirs the imagination either by some unusual presentation or by a technical innovation.

In his garden at Lindingoe, which is one of the many enchanting island suburbs that surround Stockholm, Professor Milles has demonstrated the distinction that sculpture, when it is given an appropriate setting and is in keeping with its surrounding, can impart to gardens and grounds. At the same time, he has made his estate an out-of-door museum, which he intends to leave to the Swedish people as a permanent museum of his art.

More than in the case of the monumental pieces, which must necessarily be given to stone and metal workers for cutting and casting, the small pieces, such as are shown in his garden, at Lindingoe demonstrate the exquisite quality of his craftsmanship and the infinite pains that he expends in getting a desired quality of finish.

Like all sincere and productive artists, Milles prefers that his work serve as his biography. But since a collection complete enough to tell the story is not possible, a brief résumé of the main events of his life may serve to fill the gaps. Milles was born in 1875 in a country estate near Stockholm. After a thwarted attempt to run away to sea, he was apprenticed to a cabinet-maker, where his gift for carving first evinced itself. Although he took courses in drawing at the School of Technology and won a money award sufficient to permit him to leave Stockholm, his first intention was not to study art, but to go to Chile to teach Swedish gymnastics. The way to Chile lay over Paris, which geographical coincidence determined his career. During what was intended to be only a brief stay in Paris, he became convinced that his talent lay in the direction of sculpture rather than calisthenics. He studied sculpture, came under the influence of Rodin, exhibited, won an award or two, but made no special mark until a design submitted in an open competition for a monument to be erected in Sweden, in commemoration of Sweden's national hero, Sten Sture, brought him to the attention of the European art world. This work held promise of a talent sure enough of itself to look for inspiration in native material—a promise that has been amply substantiated in his later work. He subsequently studied in Austria, Germany, and Italy and returned to Stockholm in 1908. He has had the unusual experience of being a prophet honoured in his own country. In fact, it is this popularity, which has kept him busy designing public monuments and executing private commissions these twenty years, to the exclusion of exhibiting in salons or arranging exhibitions in foreign cities, which is largely responsible for his not having achieved a more impressive international reputation. One must visit Sweden to have the slightest comprehension of the variety and scope of his work.

Swedish taste and culture are a tradition. In giving their support to contemporary Swedish art in so direct and concrete a way, the Swedish people demonstrate the living quality of their cultural background.

Gargle full strength Listerine every day. It inhibits development of sore throat, and checks it should it develop.

Let them play . . . but afterward Protect them against colds and sore throat

It isn't while playing that children catch cold—it is afterward, when, still overheated, they sit around in damp clothes or unconsciously expose themselves to drafts. These exposures, like wet feet and sudden changes of temperature, weaken body resistance so that disease germs in the mouth get the upper hand.

Therefore, in addition to the regular morning and night gargle, see that your children, however sturdy, use Listerine on returning from play.

Listerine aids Nature in warding off colds and ordinary sore throat because it is fatal to the germs which cause them. Tests in the great bacteriological laboratories show that full strength Listerine kills even the Staphylococcus Aureus (pus), the Bacillus Typhosus (typhoid) and the Streptococcus germs in counts ranging to 200,000,000, in 15 seconds. We could not make this statement unless prepared to prove it to the complete satisfaction of the medical profession and the U. S. Government. Yet Listerine is so safe that it may be used full strength in any body cavity.

Gargle with Listerine regularly every day, as a preventive measure against infection. And, at the first definite sign of colds or sore throat, increase the frequency of the gargle, meanwhile consulting your physician. If serious complications are threatening, he will detect and treat them properly. Lambert Pharmaceutical Company, St. Louis, Mo., U. S. A.

WINTER SPORTS FASHIONS

plaid, or jersey dresses are in the majority. They have only slightly higher waist-lines and slightly longer skirts. When it comes to sports, the chic woman is far from a partisan of exaggerated proportions.

Unless it is snowing, however, one squanders precious little time within doors. One is impatient to be off to one's favourite sport or merely to wander about the busy, sloping streets of the little hillside town—streets edged with those unbelievable shops.

Florists' shops, with flowers that could easily vie with those of the Chelsea flower show, and tropical and hothouse fruits to make your mouth water, especially in an air that makes every one ravenous all the time; that's the explanation of the never-ending crowd at Hanselman's, where you drink your first cocktail, eat those marvellous mushrooms on toast, and the beautiful French-Swiss pâtisserie or the fabulous German-Swiss kuchen.

Hanselman, too, will put you up a delicious lunch for traipsing over the countryside. In the funicular up to Chantarella and then up to Corviglia—a lunch on the top of the world at tables and benches beside the hut from which attentive, bronzed guides produce hot soup and sparkling Asti. These things, with cold chicken, hard-boiled eggs, cheese, bread and butter, and fruit make a royal lunch in the warm sunshine and the intoxicating, bracing air.

Some snap-shots, a cigarette, and then the fun begins: the take-off, the zigzag descent, the flying snow, perhaps a tumble. At the end of the run, in the valley, near the Suvretta House, sleighs and warm coats will be waiting and a tinkling sleigh-ride back through the sunset to Saint Moritz. This is when the tweed and heavy wool coats, lined and collared with fur, are considered much smarter than fur coats.

Or, perhaps, it is the sleigh trip to Pontresina, where again the stacked skis, the knapsacks, the bare heads, the bronzed skins, the big woolly clothes, the mittens, the scarfs give the general air of a Western town.

Further along, the skating-rinks with their bands, the waltzing couples, and the skating waiters. Then, to the left, the entrance to the top of the Cresta Run. What a place for dizzy speed! More and more of it; every one out to beat his own or some one else's record. Padded and spiked, like mediaeval warriors, these daring sportsmen rush down the mountain-side on their light skeleton steel bobs.

Further along, to the right, the entrance to the bob and bobsled runs. Every afternoon, on bright days, you will see sleighs full of the crews with their bobs dragging after, on their way to the first run or coming back up the hills from Cresta, where the run ends. Lower down, around the bend, is the "Sunny Corner," always crowded on the days when there are good runs. Here, the ice is banked in a high wall, and the bobs fly around this curve at a terrific speed, with one runner above the other, like flies on a wall. The warmest clothes are welcome.

This is the picture at Saint Moritz, but, with a twirl of the globe, it might easily be the Château Frontenac at Quebec, the Château Laurier at Ottawa, or our own Lake Placid. Winter sports, these days, are much the same on both sides of the Atlantic.

LADIES OF THE WINTER

Fashion suddenly became tired of being symbolic, and now we are treated to the exquisite paradox of a lovely lady, wearing long formal kid gloves, stepping out of her car to the accompaniment of ear-drum splitting riveting and with great difficulty managing her five separate trains. It is all very typically feminine, and men are charmed.

"Ladies" have at last come into their own again. The serviceable little messenger boy has given way to a new, essentially feminine creature who is allowed to look elegant and dignified. With cropped hair and an evening dress like a small, tight sack, it was impossible to make an "entrance," but now entrances are encouraged and utilized to the full advantage. The doors swing open—Mrs. Flightamatoot—a pause, and then a ravishing Venus sweeps into our vision in an elaboration of flowing foam. Women's clothes at last possess glamour. Now, any woman can become a Ouida heroine, but, with such a minimum of material and over-liberal display of flesh as that to which we had become accustomed, romance and "the gleaming shoulders" of the earlier days had disappeared in nudity. Now, a gardenia is tucked into jasmine-scented lace, little bows and white lace scarfs, of which dress-makers had become terrified, are used with cocksure discretion, and the colours that we loved in 1914—the asparagus-greens, the poisonous purples, and grape-bloom black—have returned to popularity. Prettiness is no longer undesirable. Thousands of yards of net and lace are made into frilling. Sunbonnets are of black satin, and no one would burn a muff.

With the advent of the new lines, ungainly women must be jubilant, for the new clothes are extremely becoming, and a multitude of sins can be hidden beneath the new draperies. In recent seasons, every defect was to be seen in every light and in every position, however natural, comfortable, or unsightly, and, although it is true that after a time one's eyes became accustomed to what they were continually forced to see, now that one sees with eyes that are accustomed to the long fluidity, one realizes how ridiculously grotesque, ugly, and vulgar were the effects caused by short skirts. The new clothes are kind.

Very few women have perfectly proportioned legs, and very few women know how to sit becomingly. And very few women, if they do know this art, are not often caught unawares. But, no longer shall we see some of the horrifying spectacles to which by degrees we became inured! No more shall we see calves flattened against a sofa or sagging ankles twisted around a chair-leg, and no longer do we catch a glimpse of shirred pink ribbon or espy a little bit of lace appearing under the skirt.

Now, the jolies ladies are pleased. The Beauty is triumphant. For, with the new mode, lovely ladies have again come into their own and stand out above all others in their utter loveliness. The perfect figure is shown to its best and most subtle advantage; the tall neck looks more lily-like emerging from the sequined lace, and the arms more alabaster in their new flimsinesses. Venus with her pale corn silk curls, feathery eyelashes, lilting movements, and water-carrier walk, is no longer mistaken for a schoolboy, but is recognized as Venus, the feminine Goddess of Beauty.

turquoise, and down through the lanes of dancing buoys to anchor at last in Hamilton Harbor, a great quiet lake ranged round with wooded hills dotted with houses, white roofed, with walls of white, deep pink, or yellow. Sailboats, with captains anxious to be hired, ran circles round us—one owned by a cheerful darky boy in a flame coloured sweater, who was politic enough to fly the Stars and Stripes, as well as the Union Jack!

All the way down, Daisy had talked about the estate that had belonged to her great-grandfather. Her grandfather had run the blockade during the Civil War, returning perilously to Bermuda after every trip, and her own earliest memories concerned the old house to which she had been brought every winter when she was a child. Old Catherine, now nearing eighty, born and raised with the family, would be there now to see that everything was arranged, and we were looking forward to the delights of having a house of our own instead of having to go to a hotel.

Sending our luggage up in an old victoria, we walked past the docks and the old houses with their two-storey verandas, up Queen Street lined with small shops full of English sports clothes and ravishing sweaters, past the old yellow Library with its huge rubber-tree, seventy feet across. An English bobby in front of it directed the carriages and bicycles that constitute "traffic."

OUR DESTINATION

I had pictured a large and impressive plantation house as our destination, but, like everything else that is truly Bermudian, the house was small and intimate—two storeyed, simple as coral blocks could make it, with a charm all its own. Catherine was on the porch, ready to welcome her beloved Miss Daisy, and we sat down to a delicious little dinner, with the fire blazing away in the old fireplace before which the Civil War had been discussed on so many anxious nights.

A day or two later, we drove over to Elbow Beach, lazying along in our little victoria over hard white coral roads that wound through charming cultivated country. The fields of rich red-brown earth looked lovingly cared for, and many of them were filled with Easter lilies that would presently have their heads wrapped up in oiled paper for a sea voyage to America.

But it was the houses that interested me most—they always do—and I felt that we in America had much to learn from them. There is a quality of simple elegance about them all, from the smallest cottage to the delightful large houses, whose owners have never yielded to the temptation of making them overelaborate. Perhaps, the very limitations of the material constitute its greatest advantage, for blocks sawed from the coral rock are too soft to permit of much ornament. Perhaps, too, the ship-right tradition of the first builders made them averse to adding extraneous detail. Then, the roofs of coral slabs must be wide, to catch the rain and guide it down to the great storage tanks on which Bermudians depend for their water-supply, and the walls must be given a coat of wash to protect them from the weather. Individual taste dictated the use of white, of deep yellow, of coral-pink—and what could be more dramatic than a twelve-foot bush of scarlet poinsettia that casts a deep blue shadow on a dead-white wall, or lovelier than pink walls, posed like a permanent sunset high over the blue sea?

The plan of each Bermuda house depends for its originality on a fresh combination of units, rather than on any novelty of design as a whole, and this plan is certainly full of suggestions for those of us with a sudden whim for a country place, quickly built and not too expensive. Why not make it of portable units, cleverly grouped to give that variety of level and roof-line that we find in Bermuda? We may not have the huge, rugged outside chimneys, the eyebrow windows, or the heavy white coins at the corners, the butteries with their sharp, pyramidal roofs, the little Georgian doorways with their delicate fanlights, or the "welcoming arms" stoop, but the idea can be worked out in terms as applicable to our lives and our climate as such charming details are to the life of Bermuda. The snug, settled, contented effect of these low little houses depends on fitness of scale and simplicity of ornament, and this should always be within our reach.

DETAILS OF CHARM

Inside, the doors and ceilings are usually of the native dark red cedar, though sometimes the builder preferred to run his rooms up into the roof to form what is called a "tray" ceiling with charming plaster cornices and so give the rooms unusual height. Wall-paper was never used; the dampness would have peeled it off in the first year. But the plain walls are so restful that one never misses pattern, and the lovely, lustrous old furniture one finds there could find no happier background. Such an immaculate surface might be better for us, in our leisure months of country life, than the carefully studied, all too formal effects that we sometimes use.

But the carriage jogs along as we plan—and here is Elbow Beach, a rugged shore of rocks and pine-trees, a marvellous stretch of white sand, a sapphire sea with light green streaks to mark the shallows. Of course, I had a swim, in water too clear to be real, where eyes never sting, refuse never comes, and the buoyancy is such that sinking would have to be accomplished on purpose. One can stand upright in thirty feet of this preposterous, melted-jewel element, moving one's hands a bit like lazy fins. Afterwards in a 'little tea-house hanging over the water, we had a perfect lunch—toasted sandwiches, eggs and bacon, and huge Bermuda strawberries with cream. Then we climbed up a high cliff among the cedars to a plateau where we asked a handsome young Portuguese with a rakish hat the way across to the ferry. He looked as though Sorolla had just painted him, with his flashing eyes and smile.

A LAND OF COLOUR

Downward we walked to the road, by a little path that ran along the red-brown fields with the rich, hot earth, edged with high hedges of hibiscus and oleanders. Croton and poinsettias in red and pink leaned out to look at us; the air was filled with the clear songs of birds; and over an old stone wall hung a curtain of morning-glories. Here and there, we caught glimpses of houses through the trees—a freshly painted pink house, with its dead-white roof and heavy white coins silhouetted against a blue sky, a white house tucked into a valley like a forgotten snow-drift.

Over the last hill was the harbour. The ferry had left, but we didn't mind—no one (Continued on page 98)

PARIS WHEN ONE LIVES THERE

Built some twenty years ago, it resembles all the other apartments in a street which is a street of apartments. The concierge's loge is extremely dingy and seems to be furnished with nothing more than an enormous double bed made of imitation bamboo. She is dejected, but so might she well be, and all others of her trade. The hall is gloomily marbleized, and the lift, one without sides, save for the frail supports at its four corners, rises with hideous slowness through thin air; there is nothing to cling to but the electric buttons. The ride in this horror is, after all, superfluous, for the apartment is in the "entresol," the name given, for some mystic reason, to most of the first floors in Paris.

FRENCH DECORATION

The apartment is opened by an aged bonne à tout faire in a crocheted shawl. The antichambre, shut out by glass doors, is papered in dull red. The salon, where you are received by the friend of Réjane, an old woman of ninety-five who could never have played any but mother parts, is a large room ("just repapered," she quavers proudly, and so indeed it is). The paper is red with purple and gilt stripes, with black polka-dots superimposed. The woodwork is dreary French-grey, imitation Louis XVI., like the greater part of the furniture, of a quantity and arrangement suggesting a warehouse. It is put (not arranged) in sets. There are two chairs and a small sofa (Louis XVI.), gilt and covered by faded, but not antique brocade; a large sofa of the button variety and two chairs, one so-called "easy," covered by imitation tapestry. In the very middle of the room and for no apparent reason, either comfort or beauty, a sedan-chair in gilt. Another Louis XVI. set, a Louis XIII., more imitation tapestry, many many tables, many many bibe-lots, a piano (grand) covered with a very tired priest's robe, genuine antique and Italian, and endless, endless photographs, all the evidences of Madame's stage career and her friendship with Réjane. An enormous photograph of Réjane signed "A ma chère amie et confrère." Réjane; Lucien Guitry in character, signed, but not so intimately; Sarah Bernhardt (no less), unsigned; Gabrielle Dorsiat in character (signed); Sacha Guitry and Yvonne Printemps as they appeared in Mozart (unsigned); a newspaper photograph of Gaby Morlay; another of Victor Boucher.

The old lady babbles on about "l'Amérique, ce cher pays." She has been there with Réjane and well received, it appears. She knows American authors well—, but Jack London is her favourite. You plot frantically how you can best escape without going through the rest of the apartment or knocking over a photograph or table or two. You have reckoned, however, without your hostess. Through the dismal dining-room, furnished with what in America is called a "suite" and in France a salle à manger (that is, all that is necessary for a dining-room), you go; through the pantry (with a minute description of each bit of china, price, and where bought), the kitchen, down the dark narrow halls from which branch the bedrooms, like so many cells in Tombs Prison, into the bedrooms, the closets, the bathroom, the "confort moderne." The merit of each is expounded in the monotonous voice. The old lady is a slave-driver, merciless, pitiful, and boring. She wants to rent her flat, she wants to talk. Like most French people, she is set on persuading you to change your mind. That, by the way, is one of the most exhausting trials of life in France.

The next morning, stripped of all illusions, you go to an agence. It is difficult to persuade the suave gentleman at the agence that the ideal apartment for an American is not a series of rooms with glass doors, red carpets, and suites of imitation Louis XVI. furniture turned out by the Galleries Lafayette.

It is suddenly and when all seems darkest that, in face of misgivings and advice, an apartment is found which appears, after all the horror, a paradise and is in reality more than adequate: a very large salon, a good-sized dining-room, a kitchen, a pantry, four bedrooms full of light; a bathroom, heating, two servants' bedrooms, and a really good location (not Left Bank, however), furniture satisfactory—attractive, in fact—and all for $150 a month. This is not an exaggerated statement. Many others can be found through an agence at lower rates, and apartments of this size are seldom higher than $400 a month.

The attractive French meublé is, however, nearly impossible to find, for the average Frenchman does not appear to possess the gifts either of assembly or of selection. Nothing is more charming than a house filled with the furniture of many generations which hundreds of people have used. But such things must be treated selectively by those who inherit, and they must be placed with a sense of comfort and beauty. With the French, the furniture of generations is just put. It stands—even in many of the great houses of Paris, famous for their architecture—in rows about the room, with no idea of coordination. Nothing has apparently been selected for a particular place or room, neither colour nor effect has been considered, and comfort is a thing unknown. It is all very like a dentist's waiting-room.

BEAUTY TOO UNADORNED

In the rue de Varenne, for example, there is a famous and very beautiful house surrounding a court and with an immense garden at the back. It belongs to one of the most distinguished families of France, who have inherited it through the ages and who can well afford to make it beautiful. It is so like a shell, so exquisite as to be breathtaking. On entering, one walks up a flight of exceedingly handsome red and black marble stairs and is hurled at once into the usual series of French rooms, high-ceilinged, perfectly proportioned. The walls are covered with marvellous boiseries, amazing tapestries; the floors, with carpets and rugs from the old factories of Aubusson and Savonnerie. Room after room. But these rooms are empty. Chairs and tables are ranged along the walls in a flat row. No one appears to have ever lived in them, to have drawn two chairs together, sat in them, or even thought about them. Yet, all these rooms and beautiful things have been in that family for generations and must have been used and touched by them.

The great museum, the Palace of Versailles, is not more dead.

The ideal home in Paris is the unfurnished apartment, which gives one a scope for indulgence in tastes or hobbies almost unequalled. It is more difficult to find than the furnished one, because there are in Paris hundreds of furnished apartments to one unfurnished one, and the terms of the choice are (Continued on page 102)

TUXEDO PARK, NEW YORK

To satisfy "the needs and preferences of its members" the sheets had to be Wamsutta

THE new Tuxedo Club combines the spaciousness and charm of a great English manor house with the equally typical American perfection of all its furnishings.

The twenty-one double rooms in the main clubhouse as well as the ten single rooms in the bachelors' wing have been furnished with an ample stock of Wamsutta sheets and pillow cases for every bed.

Before long the more transient bachelors will start asking the club steward what kind of sheets those are and where they can be bought.

At least, that is what usually happens in clubs and hotels where some one suddenly discovers how deliciously sleepy and comfortable the smoothness of Wamsutta makes a bed feel.

The fact is, of course, that Wamsutta sheets and pillow cases may be bought at any good department store. They are there in a range of styles that will please not only the primmest of bachelors but also the bride-to-be and the modern-minded housewife who likes her sheets and pillow cases to look as beautiful as possible . . . and to wear as well as they look.

ever hurries in Bermuda. We hailed a sailboat, manned by an old darky in a huge yachting cap, and came back to Hamilton in the deepening sunset, slipping through opalescent water cut in two by our sail.

We were to have tea with a great-aunt of Daisy's, still beautiful at ninety-four, still living serenely and unselfishly in a lovely, peaceful house with wonderful pieces of Santo Domingo mahogany and candles protected by crystal hurricane shades. When we arrived, the whole party of twelve or fourteen were assembled, and we walked into the dining-room, arm in arm, and sat down formally to tea and scones and a wonderful sticky sponge-cake that Daisy used to dream about as a child. The little passage to the dining-room had walls entirely covered with photographs of former friends and Governors of years gone by, and it seemed just a step backward into the old days when the ladies rode on horseback to parties, with grooms behind to carry their ball dresses.

OFF TO SAINT GEORGE'S

We had postponed our day in Saint George's—there were so many things to do, so much time to be spent at Trimmingham Brothers buying tweeds and doeskins and sweaters. But, at last, on a day of brilliant sun and rollicking wind, we set forth in a carriage fit for a queen. It had been raining all night, and the earth was still sparkling, the roads full of puddles, the rubber-trees still dripping like Cartier's jewels when the breeze caught them.

We jogged along, past fields of budding Easter lilies and thickets of tropical foliage intense with heavy perfume. Lovely vistas slid together—hill and valley and cultivated land—, then the sea again, with a gale blowing after the storm. The sky and the far-off water were blue, but the nearer ocean, dark and angry like some untamed thing, pounded against the rugged shore, tossing great buckets of spray high in the air, over the rocks and the cedars. At last, we came to the Devil's Hole, where we got out to see angel-fish that looked as though Professor Beebe had invented them, and terrifying devil-fish that satisfied their greed on banana skins.

At the Crystal Cave, we went down below to find stillness and black night, hung with huge icicles. At the Aquarium, we saw every strangeness of form and colour that a modern artist could invent. And then we lunched with hospitable Mr. McDonald, whose enthusiasm is responsible for the new Mid-Ocean Club, with its divine golf course.

Saint George is two hundred years older than Hamilton and might be in another world. Its streets are lanes with such enchanting names as Featherbed Alley, Shinbone Alley, and Old Maids' Lane. They twist and turn and wind off up the hill between high walls with glimpses of rose or red hibiscus and little Georgian gateways leading to worn white houses, their pure outlines softened by the years. They look so settled that it seems impossible to believe they are on the same side of the Atlantic as New York—such demure little houses, so well-bred, so elegant, and with such a luxurious wealth of gardens.

Saint Peter's Church, built on the oldest hallowed site in the Western Hemisphere, still houses the Communion Service sent out in 1789 by William III. One wishes, perhaps, that the tourists had not been told its value, for forty thousand pounds means more to some of them than the lovely lines and softly gleaming surfaces that endear it to the old caretaker who stands bareheaded in the sunlight with his back to the garden and his thoughts in the past. The walls of the church are covered with tablets—to those who died in the yellow fever epidemics long ago, so gallant and so pitifully young, to those who fell in the Great War only yesterday, to the good Governor Alured Popple who died, as his tablet says, after a nine-days' illness of a bilious fever in 1744, and, as his tablet does not say, imposed a tax on bachelors that made him gratefully remembered by the ladies of Bermuda. In those days, transportation made the list of American visitors a short one, but, not so many years ago, when the Guards Regiment with its aristocratic young men was sent to Bermuda (in disgrace), it has been whispered that mothers from Boston, New York, and Philadelphia took their marriageable daughters under their wings and spent the winter in the south.

THE FLAVOUR OF THE PAST

With or without such excuse, Bermuda is a delightful place to visit. As we drove home, with lighted carriage lamps under a dark blue sky that held a single jewelled star, we decided we were glad it didn't belong to the United States. There would be cars on those quiet roads, a filling station where the yellow tuberoses climbed over that old doorway, possibly even a billboard as a mark of progress where the wild freesia grew under the cedars. The Bermudians, thank heaven, are more conservative than the most conservative Englishman left alive. But will they be able to hold out when the present ship-loads from America are reinforced by the airplane contingents of the next few years? One is told that it will soon be possible to leave New York at nine o'clock in the morning and find one's tea-time scones still hot, lunching en route at a man-made island anchored by a twelve-thousand foot cable to the bottom of the sea.

IF YOU ARE GOING TO BERMUDA

You may go comfortably—even luxuriously. The Royal Mail Line, beginning in December, will send its Arcadian to Bermuda from New York every Thursday; or you may take the Bermuda of the Furness-Bermuda Line on Saturdays the year round, or the Fort Victoria on Wednesdays. In any case, the trip takes about two days.

Once there, if you are a gay young thing who must have dancing, you will probably stay at the Princess Hotel; if you are seeking a quieter atmosphere, the Hamilton will please you; Pomander Gate with its quiet charm offers rest and delightful surroundings, and the Belmont Manor has its own golf course.

If you are fortunate enough to know a member of the Mid-Ocean Golf Club who will put you up—and if there is room—you may stay there for one or two weeks. And the club will issue cards for the day, week, or two weeks to guests at the hotels who are approved by the club. The cards carry permission to play golf, swim, or lunch there.

"no doctor of standing would use anything but a liquid solvent to cleanse the skin thoroughly"

YOU, the fastidious American woman, made these prices possible

Heart-warming enthusiasm! You said: "The only way to cleanse". . . "Just what we have been wanting". . . "My face has never felt so clean before". . . "Saves the use of many preparations". . . "So quick, so thorough, so gentle." • And you used it! Big bottles and little flacons. New York's spontaneous approval was thrillingly repeated all over the country. And the more Ambrosia we made, the less the ingredients cost us. On one thing we saved one-fifth, on another one-third, on another one-fourth. • Our saving is yours! We have made the four-ounce bottle $1.00 instead of $1.50. The eight-ounce bottle is $1.75, instead of $2.50. And the sixteen-ounce bottle is $3.00, instead of $4.50. • Think of it! Enough Ambrosia for six months of pore-deep cleansing, only $3.00. Liquid cleansing that really dissolves out the deep-lying dirt and grease. Liquid cleansing that leaves the skin youthfully fine and smooth. Hinze Ambrosia, Inc., 114 Fifth Ave., New York City.

cities, such as Boston, Washington, Philadelphia, and New York, rarely have more than the street address on their stationery, as it is not necessary to add the name of the city to such an unmistakable identification as Beacon Street, Park Avenue, or Massachusetts Avenue.

In the country, however, it is essential to give the name of the town and sometimes the state. Large sheets of paper are appropriate to the country, and large lettering in bright or accented colours. Single sheets are often employed, and these are extremely smart when wider than they are long. The various methods of approach may be shown by little pictures in the same colour as that used for the address—a tiny steam-engine, a telegram, a letter, a motor, and sometimes a ferry-boat.

Monograms may be even more charmingly revealing. Ivory paper, very heavy, with a tiny circular monogram embossed in one corner, is so plainly the property of a reticent grande dame. "Sally," written out in pale green on white paper shot with faint lines, is delightfully jeune fille. The cut-out monogram, the boldness of large handsome initials, and the delicately intertwined capitals have each their separate character and their great chic.

NEW TASTES IN PAPERS

To-day, all sorts of agreeable tastes in letter-paper may be indulged, which formerly did not fall within the bounds of the strictest good form. For instance, at one time, borders were never seen except on mourning paper. Now, they may be used, though still discreetly. One example is a large sheet of English bond-paper, white, with a narrow dark blue border and one dark blue initial. Another is the paper used for a letter received recently by Vogue from a woman of internationally known good taste; it was heavy grey paper with a thin white edge and a tiny square monogram.

Another matter in which discretion must be used is in the colour of the paper itself. White, off-white, grey, and blue still compose the category into which one's choice must fall. In the simple term, "off-white," however, a dozen subtle variations are implied. Bluish-white, cream-white, white with a pale mauve cast, white faintly coffee coloured, open up fascinating possibilities of colour schemes when combined with vivid or accented monograms, initials, and addresses. The shops have nuances in white to offer that are quite undefinable and very lovely. But, aside from the shades mentioned, distinct colours and, especially, strong ones should be avoided.

Also, though one may say in general that grey is smart, and blue is smart, there are greys and greys, and blues and blues. So far as a rule can be made on the subject, greenish shades of either should be avoided. Cold, clear blues are best, and cold bluish-greys. One need only glance at a sheet of robin's-egg blue paper to see how unfortunate a drop of green may be.

It is an aphorism to say that there is more in texture than meets the eye—it has to meet the touch. There is heavy, mat-surfaced paper, thin, almost tissue-like paper, and paper that has a grain, whether it be a linen finish or some watering of the paper. Discrimination in texture is tremendously important if one would have distinguished letter-paper. Some paper, however expensive, has an essentially cheap finish and surface to it. For instance, very rough "oatmeal" surfaces seem in fundamentally bad taste, just as rough torn edges on paper are apt to seem. On the other hand, the distinction of a dull, smooth-surfaced paper is indescribable—only the finger-tips can convey its suave quality. So-called "bond" paper has the correct texture, and so has the only slightly rough granite, and some versions of faintly glazed paper. One must sense the difference between the chic and the would-be-chic, as the difference, although enormous, is impossible to put into words.

Monograms and initials must be handled with care. Too many colours used in a monogram are garish. A subtle choice is to use a lighter or darker shade of the paper itself for the monogram. Monograms should not be too ornate, nor too elaborate, nor too unusual in design. But there are so many really beautiful and classic designs and colours to be adapted that restriction is the last thing to trouble one in the matter.

Initials must be dignified. This seems an unnecessary rule to set down, but one only too often comes across paper initialled in too fanciful, too lurid, and too unconventional a fashion. The initial is essentially a simple form and should be treated with simplicity. Large block initials are handsome, French script initials exquisite, and, besides these always beautiful types, there are a thousand ways of treating initials with effectiveness and dignity.

There was a day when any but the smallest, most delicate, and unobtrusive of addresses was not considered in the best of taste for letter-paper. To-day, the address, like the initial and the monogram, is considered in the light of an adornment to the paper, rather than merely necessary information. The placing, colouring, and designing of an address on stationery is like the composition of a picture, on which its success depends. Sometimes, depending upon the size of the paper and the kind of type used, the address is best placed in the centre at the top of the page; sometimes, to the right side; and sometimes, to the left. In matters like this lies the fascination of choosing paper. Perhaps, one has selected large sheets of that mixed grey paper called granite; an address in bold shiny red letters would be striking and distinguished placed high up in the right-hand corner. Or, on a small folded page of tissue-thin white, one might have the name of one's house and the village placed rather low in the centre, in small, brilliant green letters.

ETIQUETTE OF CRESTS

If one is fond of crests, one should remember that there is a definite etiquette concerning heraldry. The points to remember are, briefly, that a woman may use only her father's or, when she is married, her husband's coat of arms. For her own stationery, she uses the shield of the coat of arms, enclosed in a diamond-shaped frame, called a lozenge. A woman never uses the crest for her own paper. These rules are often transgressed, the more's the pity.

Then, too, the colouring and size of a lozenge are matters to be treated reverently. Each coat of arms has its own heraldic colouring, and this should be adhered to. It is not good form to choose and use colours not traditionally those of one's coat of arms. The admissible alternative is to have the lozenge embossed without colour, which is very handsome.

Envelopes may be square or oblong, but they must always be simple and conventional in design. Fancy shapes, odd flaps and (Continued on page 108)

As light spreads over dawn, so Elizabeth Arden has spread over the civilized world. Miss Arden has created internationalism in beauty. In Holland, in Japan, in Egypt, in Spain—everywhere—are lovely women with the "Arden look."
Have you ever thought of why you see fifty attractive looking women today where, twenty years ago, you saw but one?
For this reason. When Elizabeth Arden entered the profession of Beauty, she lifted it with her vision, her passionate impatience with imperfection, out of haphazard guessing into sincerity and science.

When you buy Elizabeth Arden Preparations, you are buying integrity—the incorruptible sincerity of a woman who has refused repeatedly, in spite of great inducements, to sell her name—for fear that this high quality which she has maintained from the beginning, might be lowered, and thus she would betray the trust of millions of women all over the world, who, through experience, have learned to identify Elizabeth Arden with honor and high attainment.

*Ask for Elizabeth Arden's book: "The Quest of the Beautiful," which will tell you how to follow her scientific method in the care of your skin at home. ## PARIS WHEN ONE LIVES THERE more limited, because an unfurnished apartment implies permanency.

With persistence, by constantly fighting the agence that persists in pressing on you very new glass-doored apartments with tiny tenement rooms and insists that you want to live in a quarter detested by you or totally inconvenient, by asking questions of every one or making yourself a complete bore, by climbing endless stairs and going up in endless lifts, by facing endless disappointment, the ideal, or very nearly the ideal, can be attained.

Although the prevailing rents are higher than they used to be, they are, in comparison with New York rents, insignificant. A perfect bachelor apartment in the rue Palais Royal can be had for $600 a year. A large, luxurious, ten-roomed apartment on the Seine, for $3,000 at most. There is a range of prices in between.

The apartment rented, you can "go" anything—Louis XV., Louis XVI., Directoire, Empire, Louis Philippe, Moderne, or a happy or unhappy mixture. Not many Americans have gone Moderne, for in art we appear to be a conservative nature, uncertain of our own taste, but some are nibbling. Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Murphy and Mr. and Mrs. Archbald McLeish have done it, but they are both households of the Advance Guard. The great tendency among us is eighteenth-century, of which the most perfect example—one of the most beautiful of houses—is that of Mr. and Mrs. Cole Porter in the rue Madame. Mrs. Havemeyer, a few years ago, rented unfurnished a very fascinating Empire apartment in the rue de l'Université. It was in a house built by Napoleon for Queen Hortense. The walls of the salon were in the most perfect Empire boiserie, gold and white, with the bees, swans, and eagles in each panel. Mrs. Havemeyer did her bedroom and dressing-room in pure Empire, and they were complete and perfect things. But Empire does not mix well. The beautiful big salon could not be livable and correct at the same time, and so she moved to Neuilly, where she can have a house more suited to her hospitable and excellent taste.

There is a tendency among some to "go" Louis Philippe and to call it "amusing." Certainly, an apartment with touches of this style here and there, in the right place, can be a relief from too much perfection of purity. The too correct is not always very personal, and many a house in Paris resembles a museum.

HOUSEKEEPING IN PARIS

After the fun of furnishing the apartment comes the other really demoralizing factor in Paris—the thing which makes of the housewife a lotus-eater. That is the housekeeping.

Housekeeping in Paris, in comparison to the dimensions it assumes in the United States, is so easy as to be almost non-existent. A perfect cook, a good maid can be secured at $20 a month. A chef or any man servant would come to from $35 to $40. These are high wages, for there are many and excellent servants to be had for less. But that is not the most radiant part of it. Every morning, the cook presents herself to you. She does not stand waiting dumbly for suggestions, having to be asked, "Is there salt in the house? Are there enough potatoes to last?" Nor does she gape at you while you painfully work out the menus for the day. She says, "How many will there be for each meal today?" The answer may be "Two for lunch and two for dinner," or "Ten for lunch and twenty for dinner." Her expression conveys no flicker of anything but interest. She will either glibly give you a verbal menu at once or write one out, subject to correction or suggestion. The program for the day having been settled between you, she takes a market-basket and goes forth to market. She buys what she needs and pays cash for it. There are no bills. At the end of each week or after a certain fixed number of days, she presents you with her "livre" or account-book. You struggle through the illegible figures and wonder about some of the prices and pay her. That, save for a certain amount of supervision, is the beginning and end of housekeeping in Paris.

WHAT TO OVERLOOK

To this system, there are certain slight disadvantages. There is an unwritten law (understood and winked at) in Paris by which a cook (or, for that matter, any servant) receives from the dealers a commission for every article bought. The result, quite obviously, is that as much as possible is bought and, unless a certain rein is put on what can be spent, one is glutted with food and the account becomes more and more stupendous. For that, in reality, is the manner in which a French servant earns her or his living. Some people allow them a certain amount each week, some nag at them till they leave, accusing them of robbery. Some put a check on them every once in so often, and the lazy and unscrupulous let Nature take its course. Most people fuss a little, though the commission itself is never mentioned. But no amount of bold-faced robbery brings the cost of the best French servant within hailing distance of the wages of the most unreliable American one.

The other servants are quite as easy to deal with as the cook. They are eager and willing. The maid will do all the deadly forms of shopping (such as buttons and tape), all the telephoning, ordering or scolding, and odd jobs and errands without end. The man (maître d'hôtel) can be used in the same degrading capacities. They present their books and receive their commissions, too. There is some code of honour among them by which some servants pay certain bills and some, others. For instance, the maître d'hôtel pays for the wines, the maid for anything connected with dress-making.

There is another disadvantage to the French servant—a fault almost universal. That is the inclination to sloppiness. They are eager and willing, but dust, after having been tossed in the air, falls back to whence it came. Among purely French servants, the feather duster is still the badge of their profession. All sorts of lost objects are found long afterwards under carpets; cobwebs have to be pointed out. A scolding at intervals brings a few bright days, but there is always a relapse. In time comes the hideous temptation not to look.

Another thing that must be taught the French servant is the difference between the serving of a French meal and the serving of an American one. Even to those who want to be more French than the French, the French meal is interminable. For it is served in the following fashion, each item successively and separately: hors-d'œuvre, melon, fish, meat, a vegetable (that is to say peas or string-beans served dreary and unsupported in the mid- (Continued on page 104)

Lifts Beauty From Your Skin

Marie Earle's Basic Beauty Treatment Guards the Radiance of Youth

THE charm of warm responsiveness so highly prized in social life today exacts a heavy penalty from unprotected beauty. Vivacious emotions registered in ever changing facial expressions, smiles, frowns, worried looks, alas weave deep, unwanted lines into the skin.

But gracious women now refuse to pay the wrinkle price life demands of beauty. For Marie Earle has perfected a wonderful Basic Beauty Treatment. Now you care for your skin at home with the same exquisite results she has obtained for nineteen years in her famous Paris and New York Salons.

Marie Earle's Treatment is so marvelously effective you need only three of her fine preparations to gain a flower-like skin, so smooth and supple that the most vivid expressions cease to wrinkle youth away. First, Essential Cream, so soft, smooth and penetrating it both cleanses and nourishes more effectively than any two creams you have used before. Second, Cucumber Emulsion, soothes, preserves the fair coloring of youth and helps the skin absorb the beauty bringing oils in the Cream. Last, you close the pores, tone, freshen and stimulate with the lotion prepared for your type.

You will want to start this truly beauty bringing Treatment today. Before you would believe it possible you see lovely new clearness and silken softness coming back to your skin. The Marie Earle preparations are on sale at smart shops in most cities.

Marie Earle's exclusive beauty preparations cost no more than one expects for the results they bring. The fine Essential Cream is $1.90. Cucumber Emulsion, $2.90, and the Toning Lotion $1.00. Marie Earle's skilled methods for banishing every skin fault are explained in her newest book on beauty, "Understanding Your Skin". The coupon will bring you your complimentary copy.

PARIS WHEN ONE LIVES THERE

dle of a large plate), salad, cheese, dessert, fruit. At the end of such a meal, hours have passed and one is exhausted. Probably, the thing most unnerving is the lonely vegetable, to which no American can really become accustomed.

Breakfast, to a hearty eater or a hard worker, is distressing. It is, with great luxury, served in bed, but consists only of a cold piece of French bread (which one may or may not like) and bitter French coffee (to which one becomes accustomed) or scummy chocolate. A demand for toast at first brings forth a hard toasted roll. The demand for butter is frequently greeted with surprise. By persistence, an American breakfast can be created, but it is not in the movement. The cook, never being quite approving, regards it as a foolish innovation and not worthy of a supreme effort. A boiled egg is a safe bet, but it is never wise to risk a poached one.

The French tea, on the other hand, suffers from too much sumptuousness. One of the great forms of entertainment among the French is the goûter or tea. It is a form of horror that should be visited once, if only to go under the head of "experience." In the centre of a room so crowded as to be utterly breathless is a table smothered by what Victorians called a "collation"—cakes, tarts, sandwiches, pâtisserie, creams, chocolates, candies, sweetmeats, being devoured by a silent and determined assemblage who have counted on it to take the place of dinner. It requires patience and persistence to remove the custom of these goûters from the brain of the French cook and to reduce tea to a question of a few mouthfuls. Any mention of extra guests is likely to bring out an orgy of little cakes and cream tarts.

Entertaining in Paris is only too easy. If fate so arranges it that one has invited twenty-five or even fifty guests—that is, a number above the capacity of your household, anything from maîtres d'hôtel to silver, linen, and tables can be rented at very low rates. All is done smoothly and capably, quite without hitches, with practically no mental strain on the part of the hostess. All the necessary accessories appear and disappear magically.

A LIFE OF LEISURE

Curiously enough, in spite of all this saving of energy, there seems to be little time for doing anything in Paris. Paradoxically, it is because there really is so little to do. There are in Paris no "activities;" no one in the world seems to be what is called in New York "doing" anything. No one has a shop. There are no "jobs," save an occasional dreary one as a vendeuse interpreter. Lectures are not a habit, but the privilege of dusty blue stockings. The things to be done in Paris are always the same, for six months, or for one month, or for a year. They are static. The air is definitely enervating. After breakfast in bed, it is hard to be up by eleven. After lunch, it is easy to sit around and talk. The energy of Americans is more a matter of climate than of race. In Paris, life flows along easily, pleasantly, and rather mistily.

An outline of the activities of the average housewife may give the best impression of the average day in Paris.

It is, let us say, March. By the time breakfast is over, the cook's visit, the telephone calls, and the delicious spell of reading, there is just time to see the console table you thought of buying yesterday before the shops close at twelve. Suppose you live in Passy, the temptation to walk in the soft grey air is irresistible. Shop-windows tempt you. You drop in at Boiceau's and buy the modern rug which has been tempting you for weeks and which you have been striving to reconcile with the various furniture and periods in your salon. You emerge guilty and triumphant and realize that, not only is it after twelve, but the console table and the rug would be utterly incongruous; besides, you saw at Boiceau's a console table, modern, in the most beautiful wood, very expensive and exciting. Would it go with anything else in your salon or must you start refurnishing?

You stroll along and wonder about the fashions in the shops and wish you had the kind of dark, piquant French face that can wear the new hats at their most extreme backward tilt. The trees are very green, and the sky shows signs of clearing. The Place de la Concorde strikes you with its beauty as if you had never seen it before. You feel deliciously well and realize for the moment why so many people smack their lips when they say "Paris." There is just time for a visit to the bank to see if there is enough money deposited to pay for the rug and to be asked by the man in the caisse, who must have seen you at least fifty times in the past six months, if you have an account? The bank is crowded, and, by keeping your head well buried in your cheque-book, you avoid the old friend of the family who sits opposite you, but not a girlhood friend, who hears you have a fascinating apartment and asks when she can come to tea? The sky looks a little darker outside the bank, and, scuttling by the overenthusiastic doorman, you scramble through the rain into a vehicle to take you out to lunch.

It is a luncheon of Americans, just landed, eight people of both sexes. You are very glad to see them and glow with the idea that there are no people you can ever like so much. There is the usual exchange of news, gossip, and experiences. They seem to have seen and heard a hundred more interesting things in their two days here than you in your six months. They are far more up on the fashions. They even have more addresses of cheap little dressmakers and delectable restaurants. There is, however, the usual barrage of questions as to where to go and what plays to see, and, eventually, you sally forth with one of them to follow her inclination, whether it be to go to the dressmakers, to an exhibition, or furniture buying.

A SOLEMN AMUSEMENT

At five o'clock you go to play bridge with the French. This, after the goûter, is their most popular form of entertainment, and it is infinitely superior. It is quite a solemn performance. Generally, unless it is a horror called "a bridge," from four to eight people play, hardly greeting or speaking to one another, from five until, exhausted, breathless, and blinded from trying to read the numbers on the French playing-cards, you say you are afraid you have to be at dinner at nine. It is by that time ten minutes to nine. They glare at you, wanting another rubber, but you remain firm. A delicious tea has been served, to which dummy helps himself as silently and unobtrusively as possible. A hasty good-bye. Three others leave hurriedly with you, and the remaining play on indefinitely.

You and your husband dine with two, three, or (Continued on page 106)

inter sports have set the pace for winter styles of the new HOOD RAINTOGS

ONE of the most interesting things to women about the past summer was the wholehearted endorsement Fashion gave to Health. Never was interest in the benefits of exposure to sun and air quite so keen. Fashion, once favoring pale skin tones, declared itself for sun-tan. And styles kept pace.

This winter, styles are anticipating the increasing joys of staying out-of-doors. Women who refuse to be firesiders are finding new delight in this season's modes of the open. Adequate weather protection is accomplished without the slightest sacrifice of chic.

Consider the new Hood Raintogs, for example. Here you have an entirely new and different development in protective footwear for the winter months. Raintogs are made of an attractive suede-finish material in a variety of shades that make ensemble harmony merely a matter of selection. Light as a feather on your feet and yet absolutely waterproof.

Raintogs are made in all sizes and in various widths and heel heights which insure perfect fit for all types of modern shoes. They are patented by the Hood Rubber Company and are sold only under the Hood trade-mark. To try them on is to realize their delightful combination of utility and smart appearance.

PARIS WHEN ONE LIVES THERE

four other people, French or American or English, either at a restaurant or at your or their house. It is informal, arranged almost on the spur of the moment, cosy amusing, and the kind of thing that can be done in Paris night after night. If you feel in the mood, you can go on to a boîte or to Montmartre, or you can sit and talk at Fouquet's or any café that might appeal.

This day may be varied. It may be that you don't lunch out at all. It may be that, instead of the French "bridge," you go to a tea on the Left Bank of what the New York Herald calls "Latin Quarter Folk" and what is, in reality, the literary Americans in Paris. Such an affair may not be roaring fun, as no teas are, but there can be entertaining or interesting people there. The most interesting of these teas are given by Mr. William Aspinwall Bradley and his French wife, sister of Pierre Mille, who lends a more cosmopolitan atmosphere to the affair, and offers not even a suggestion of a cocktail. One sees there Ernest Hemingway, Gertrude Stein, James Joyce, Ford Maddox Ford, Glenway Westcott, Jean Bertrand, Pierre Mille, André Maurois, and countless others out of the world of politics and literature.

In the evening, you might go to a large dinner (many are given), French and American and British, or American only, or to what is called a "Party" in Montparnasse, which consists of a medley of writers, painters, musicians, and newspaper men, of various nationalities, chiefly Americans and a smattering of Russians and French. For entertainment, punch and talk with occasional dancing to a phonograph.

One might enumerate indefinitely the various things that might be done in one day in Paris, the various sets in which one might mingle, and the sort of day each set might pass. For Paris, like all cities, is compounded of sets, some of which mingle and some of which have barely heard of one another. There are, for instance: The American Woman's Club set; the set which, for want of a better name, we will call the "Lido set," centered about the personality of the famous Miss Elsa Maxwell; the Latin Quarter or literary set; the American Colony (prominent in the columns of the New York Herald); the bankers' set (chiefly formed of the members of the Morgan bank); the American wives of French husbands set; the Roman Catholic French set; the Protestant French set (very distinct); the Faubourg Saint-Germain set (what is left of it); the Bonapartists;

the rue Cambon Ritz set; the Place Vendôme Ritz set; the cocktail bar set (of which "The Sun Also Rises" gives such a graphic summary); and so forth ad infinitum. Any transient in Paris would, of course, find his own level. Their days would in the last analysis add up to about the same as my typical day. That is, a day in which nothing is really done.

There is one other thing which most certainly keeps the American living in Paris busy—that is, being a hostess. For she is hostess to every American of whom she has ever met or even heard. Of these, there is an endless stream, thin at times, it is true, but never quite ceasing. It mounts from a gentle trickle in midwinter to a raging torrent in May. There are friends (the people you really want to see), people with whom you barely had a bowing acquaintance in America, hosts with letters of introduction, friends of friends—and so it goes on.

It is natural for those who arrive in a foreign city to want to look up any one whom they know or of whom they have heard. It is natural when some one does look you up to feel it a pleasure (which it generally is) or a duty (which it can be) to see that they get some form of entertainment. Most people are easily satisfied, but there are occasional visitors who feel it your duty to them and to your reputation to produce something special, Mr. James Joyce for example, or a party composed entirely of the rich and smart members of the Faubourg Saint-Germain. They don't see why they should come all the way to Paris to meet the "Jones," with whom they were brought up—and no doubt they are right.

That you are regarded as Information Bureau, Apartment Agency, Employment Bureau, Travel Bureau, shopping expert, connoisseur of all foods and wines and where to get them, endowed with light on the very latest fashions and where and how cheap, on every kind of doctor, from alienist to chiropractist, goes without saying. There is something almost touching in the faith reposed in you.

I suppose living in Paris might be called a full life, in the sense of time filled, an agreeable one, in the sense of amusement, and a life which at times you love. On the whole, unlike living in London or Madrid or perhaps even a German city, there is always the sense of living in a beautiful empty shell, in a place in which you do not belong, in which you have no root, and in which, all protestations of faith to the contrary, you are and always will be an alien.

You Save $4
by this special subscription offer
52 Issues of Vogue $8

Ordinarily, Vogue costs $6 a year . . . 2 years $12. Now, for a brief while, you can get TWO YEARS FOR $8 . . . 52 issues . . . a saving of $4, or 1/3 the usual price.

THIS $4 is only your first . . . and smallest . . . saving. Every dollar you invest in Vogue's early, authentic fashion information will save $100.

You waste no money on buying wrong things. The gown you buy and never wear is the really expensive gown. Gloves, shoes, hats that just miss chic are the ones that cost more than you can afford. You may easily save many times Vogue's purchase price by avoiding a single over-popular or declining style.

You waste no money on buying unnecessary things. Guided by Vogue, you plan your whole season's wardrobe in advance, complete, with interchangeable accessories. It is really amazing how many things, unthinkingly bought by less well-informed women, you do not need at all. You may easily save Vogue's purchase price in passing by a single unsmart or unneeded scarf or bag.

And . . . if you accept this special offer now . . . you will have Vogue to insure the correctness of your entire wardrobe, every other Thursday, for two whole years.

Chic is a matter of information, not of income. Wrong things are often costlier than right. What you leave off is even more important than what you put on. Guided by Vogue, you may look smart on a $100 expenditure, while uninformed women look frumpish in $10,000 worth of mink and pearls.

Why take chances again this year, when . . . by simply sending in the coupon below with $8 . . . you can insure full value from every dollar of your dress allowance for two whole years through the guidance of Vogue.

"I TAKE MY PEN IN HAND"

fantastic linings are always in the worst of taste. The best flap is the regular triangular one, not too exaggeratedly long. Linings, if they are used, should be real linings, not simulated by colouring on the inside of the envelope. Also, it is absurd to use linings unless they are needed. They originated with thin paper envelopes that were transparent enough to make it possible to read through them. If your paper is of this sort, it would be very sensible indeed to line your envelopes with some plain, quiet tissue lining, but, if the envelopes are heavy, linings would be superfluous.

Nothing is more delightful than charming letter-paper, to choose, to use, and to receive. As the woman of exquisite taste, awakening at ten of a clear morning, finds, with her coffee and rolls, an invitation to a country house, written on large pale blue paper, another to lunch on tiny pages of grey paper with a silver monogram, and a third, a letter from a dear friend—sheets and sheets of heavy white paper with the familiar monogram in mauve and blue—she realizes that her pleasure in these lovely letters, aside from their agreeable contents, can only be equalled by the pleasure she will find in replying to them, on her own delicate paper, faintly shot with grey and bearing at the top her two initials, in deep rose.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS

Any reader of Vogue can obtain from the Information Service answers to questions on social conventions and matters of etiquette, especially those pertaining to letters, invitations, and similar subjects. In writing, it is asked that the following rules be followed.

(1) The name and address must be legibly written or printed at the beginning or end of every letter.

(2) In order to answer all inquiries promptly, Vogue suggests that as few questions as possible be asked in any one letter; a reply may be delayed because of the totally unrelated questions contained in a letter, any one of which may require a considerable amount of research to answer it adequately.

(3) Unless specially requested to keep a reply confidential, Vogue is privileged to publish any inquiry and answer that it considers of interest to its readers.

Mrs. W. H. A.: Should a young man of eighteen, in his first year of college, have "Mr." engraved on his cards? What is the correct type of engraving for his card, and should there be a panel edge or not? Also, what is correct for women's cards? Should a coat of arms be used on note-paper?

Ans.: Any one who has calling-cards at all would have his or her title prefixed to the name. A young man's card might be engraved in either block script or Old English lettering, and it is not panelled. Not too large double sheets of paper are used by a woman. The address or her monogram or both may appear in the centre or on either side at the top. The address must not appear on the envelope. One should avoid using a crest or a coat of arms unless one thoroughly understands their etiquette. Men generally use large white single sheets of paper, with the address in the centre or on either side.

Do you want to play BETTER GOLF?

Would you like to play the sort of game that needs no apology? Then this is the time to do some intelligent practising—to beat last year's game on the course next spring! The American Golfer can help you.

Month by month, The American Golfer shows "how-to" pictures of experts making difficult shots, of canny professionals illustrating beginner's faults and how to correct them . . . slow motion pictures of strokes from start of backswing to follow through . . . articles by champions on how they play the game. All these things carefully studied will take strokes off your own score!

In addition, Miss Glenna Collett, the new associate editor in charge of women's golf interests, writes monthly on golf, describing her own methods of play and commenting on the methods successfully used by other champions.

12 Instructive Lessons In One Booklet!

Let golf's most famous experts help you with your game. This illustrated booklet of Twelve Golf Lessons will be mailed to you, without charge, as part of your subscription, upon receipt of coupon below.

JOCK HUTCHISON explains his method of getting distance on the long drive. BOBBY CRUICKSHANK tells how to handle the long irons to advantage. CHICK EVANS explains how you can easily become proficient in mashie play. JACK WHITE points out for you the most important essentials of good putting. ABE MITCHELL outlines the basis of play in recovery from bunkers and rough. WILLIE MACFARLANE tells how to play short approach shots successfully. JOHNNY FARRELL describes the correct method of starting the backswing. JIM BARNES explains his five most important tips underlying all golf strokes. ABE MITCHELL prescribes his cures for golfers' most common fault—the slice. EDDIE LOOS gives a fine lesson on how to concentrate when playing a shot. ERNEST JONES clearly explains what is meant by "hit with the clubhead". JIM BARNES shows how to pivot properly, and the importance of the body turn.

SMART CLOTHES AT ONLY MODERATE COST

5117.

© The Condé Nast Publications, Inc.

How much does your material cost? Twelve dollars? Twenty-five? . . . How much does your pattern cost? A mere fraction of that amount. . . . Yet your dress can be no smarter than your pattern, no matter how good your material is. . . . If, for a few cents extra, you could insure your dress, so that it would positively be a success . . . wouldn't you do it?

Buying a Vogue Pattern is just exactly that.

Vogue Patterns are not made by the million—there are not a million women in America who know the difference between a smart frock and one that just misses it.

Vogue Patterns are made for the few women in each community who understand what chic means—who know that it is made up of little things, tiny differences in cut and fit, that turn to big differences in total effect—women who want to follow Paris and New York—who must not only have the new thing, but have it right.

Such a woman realizes that Vogue's world-wide fashion gathering service costs hundreds of thousands of dollars; and that all Vogue Patterns are founded on its judgment. She knows that this necessitates the few cents extra in pattern cost to her. She pays it gladly, because she has proved that it constitutes style insurance for all the rest of her clothes expenditure.

And never more gladly than in this particular season, when a complete change in the mode, coinciding with a complete change in the market, makes smart clothes at moderate cost a more critical problem than ever before.

DUESENBERG, INC., INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

"Finlandia," painted for the Steinway Collection by Peter Helck

The work of Jean Sibelius is deeply penetrated with the spirit of his race. His stirring tone-poem "Finlandia" is a composition of contrasted moods telling of a people determined to be free. It closes with an exultant passage which might seem a prophetic vision foreshadowing their ultimate national triumph.

TONE is to the pianist what pigment is to the painter. With it he renders a composition, colors it, and gives it point and meaning. Through it he must realize all that he knows, or feels, of music.

It is only natural, therefore, that the musician should be most critical of the tonal quality of the instrument which he would call his own. . . . And it is peculiarly significant that virtually every musician of note, from Liszt to Sibelius, has chosen the Steinway.

Only notable superiority of performance could win and keep such universal favor among musicians. For this reason Steinway & Sons have developed their own scheme and balance of action, draft of scale, system of acoustics and exclusive design and construction of cases . . . in order that the Steinway may continue pre-eminent among pianos. The unexampled tone of the Steinway is the result of this ceaseless scientific research.

Though the Steinway sets these standards in pianoforte perfection, it is still a piano that is well within the means of people of modest income. With a deposit of only $147.50 you may have your own Steinway Grand. And though you may select your Steinway from many different sizes and models, each at a different price, there is only one quality of Steinway.

A new Steinway $875
Upright piano can be bought for
GRANDS $1475 and up
plus transportation

10% down balance in two years

Used pianos accepted in partial exchange. If there is no Steinway dealer near you, write for information to

Heights of Pleasure

Glittering mountains under a sky of frosty blue . . . the tingle from a brisk climb . . . and the perfect relaxation of a comforting, fragrant cigarette. The outstanding characteristic of Camels is their ability to heighten the pleasure of any occasion . . . they are so wholly, so delightfully refreshing.
